The government respectfully submits this memorandum of law in opposition to the petition for a writ of habeas corpus filed by petitioner M.P.L., Dkt. No. 1.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

M.P.L., a native and citizen of El Salvador, challenges his detention by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (“ICE”) during the pendency of his removal proceedings and seeks an order from this Court granting his petition for a writ of habeas corpus and requiring his immediate release or a bond hearing with certain criteria.

M.P.L. is subject to the Immigration and Nationality Act’s (“INA”) mandatory detention provision pertaining to certain criminal aliens, codified at 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c). That provision requires ICE to detain M.P.L. during the pendency of his removal proceedings and does not permit him to receive a bond hearing. M.P.L. asserts that his detention of five months has become unduly prolonged in violation of his due process rights.

For the reasons set forth below, M.P.L.’s challenges to his detention are without merit. Removal proceedings for M.P.L. have moved swiftly; an immigration judge considered M.P.L.’s application for relief from removal and issued a removal order within three months of M.P.L. being detained. And there are additional procedural protections available to M.P.L. through the immigration courts, albeit ones of which M.P.L. has yet to properly avail himself—including an avenue for him to challenge the statutory authority for his detention, to the extent he wishes to do so. There is therefore no basis to conclude that M.P.L.’s detention has somehow become unconstitutional, and the Court should deny the habeas petition.

BACKGROUND

I. M.P.L.’s Immigration History and Detention by ICE

M.P.L., a native and citizen of El Salvador, claims to have unlawfully entered the United States in 2007. See Declaration of Deportation Officer William D. Morrow (“Morrow Decl.”) ¶¶ 4, 6.

On February 27, 2025, the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration (“DEA”), which at the time had custody of M.P.L. after arresting him, transferred M.P.L. to ICE custody. Id. ¶ 5. During a processing interview by ICE, M.P.L. was asked whether he had “ever been in a gang,” to which he responded, “Yes MS-13.” Id. ¶ 6. The same day, ICE served M.P.L. with a Notice to Appear (“NTA”), the charging document used to commence removal proceedings, which charged him as removable pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(6)(A)(i), as an alien present in the United States without being admitted or paroled. Morrow Decl. ¶ 8; Gov’t Return Ex. 1. ICE also served the NTA on the Varick Street Immigration Court (the detained docket) in New York, New York, thereby commencing removal proceedings against M.P.L. Id. After an interim transfer to an Elizabeth Contract Detention Facility in Elizabeth, New Jersey so that M.P.L. had a place to sleep that night, ICE transferred M.P.L. late the following day to the Orange County Jail in Goshen, New York, where he has remained since. Id. ¶ 9. M.P.L. is housed in a unit solely for ICE detainees. Id.

II. Removal Proceedings

On March 5, 2025, M.P.L. appeared with counsel before an immigration judge for an initial master calendar hearing. Morrow Decl. ¶ 10. The immigration judge adjourned the case to March 12, 2025, so that M.P.L.’s counsel would have additional time to prepare the case. Id.

On March 6, 2025, M.P.L. filed a motion for a custody redetermination (i.e., bond) hearing. Id. ¶ 11. A hearing was scheduled for March 17, 2025, but M.P.L. withdrew his motion on March 12, indicating that his counsel needed additional time to collect documents. Id.

On March 12, 2025, M.P.L. appeared with counsel before an immigration judge for the continued master calendar hearing. Id. ¶ 12. At the hearing, M.P.L. admitted the NTA’s allegations except the NTA’s “unknown” date of entry, Gov’t Return Ex. 1; M.P.L. claimed entry to the United States in or about 2007. Morrow Decl. ¶ 12. M.P.L. indicated that he would be filing an application for relief from removal, and the immigration judge adjourned the matter to March 24, 2025. Id.

On March 24, 2025, the scheduled master calendar hearing took place and M.P.L. filed an application for asylum and withholding of removal, including protection under the Convention Against Torture (“CAT”). Id. ¶ 13. An individual (i.e., merits) hearing on that application was ultimately scheduled for May 8, 2025. Id.

On May 8, 2025, M.P.L. appeared with counsel for a merits hearing. Id. ¶ 14. M.P.L. withdrew his request for asylum and withholding of removal with prejudice after conceding he was ineligible for that relief, and stated that he only wished to pursue deferral of removal under the CAT. Id. At the conclusion of the hearing, and following limited testimony from M.P.L. and from an expert who testified on M.P.L.’s behalf, the immigration judge reserved decision. Id. On May 23, 2025, the immigration judge issued a written decision denying M.P.L.’s application for deferral of removal under the CAT and ordering M.P.L. removed to El Salvador. Id.

On June 17, 2025, M.P.L. filed an appeal of the immigration judge’s May 23, 2025, merits decision with the Board of Immigration Appeals (“BIA”). Id. ¶ 16. The BIA has not yet set a briefing schedule for the appeal. Id.

III. M.P.L.’s Habeas Petition

On June 25, 2025, M.P.L. filed a habeas petition under 28 U.S.C. § 2241 in this Court. Dkt. No. 1. M.P.L. challenges his detention as unlawful and seeks an order from this Court requiring ICE to immediately release him or give him a bond hearing with certain criteria. He asserts that his detention pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) without a bond hearing violates his due process rights under a case-by-case analysis. Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241 (“Pet.”), Dkt. No. 1, ¶¶ 43–52.

LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR ICE’S
DETENTION AUTHORITY UNDER 8 U.S.C. § 1226

ICE generally has the discretionary authority to detain an alien during removal proceedings. 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a); Carlson v. Landon, 342 U.S. 524, 538 (1952) (“Detention is necessarily a part of [the] deportation procedure.”); accord Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510, 523 (2003) (“[D]etention during deportation proceedings [is] a constitutionally valid aspect of the deportation process.”). An alien whom ICE detains as a matter of discretion may be released on bond, either by an ICE officer or by an immigration judge at a bond hearing. 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a)(2); 8 C.F.R. §§ 236.1, 1003.19, 1236.1(d)(1). In contrast, for some aliens, Congress made detention during removal proceedings mandatory. As relevant here, Congress provided in 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) that aliens who have committed certain criminal or terrorist offenses must be detained during removal proceedings. See 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c); Demore, 538 U.S. at 517–18. Congress enacted § 1226(c) in response to evidence that immigration authorities were unable to remove many criminal aliens because they failed to appear for removal hearings and that criminal aliens released on bond often committed additional crimes before they could be removed. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 518–20; Jennings v. Rodriguez, 583 U.S. 281, 286 (2018) (detention during removal proceedings prevents an alien from absconding or reoffending pending a decision).

To address these problems, § 1226(c) provides that “[t]he Attorney General shall take into custody any alien who” committed offenses listed in the statute.<sup>1</sup> 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1). Section

<sup>1</sup> Although the relevant statutory sections refer to the Attorney General, the Homeland Security Act of 2002, Pub. L. No. 107-296, 116 Stat. 2135 (2002), transferred all immigration enforcement and administration functions vested in the Attorney General, with very few exceptions, to the Secretary of Homeland Security. See also 8 U.S.C. § 1551 note.

1226(c) further provides that the Attorney General “may release” that alien “only” under narrow circumstances not applicable here, id. § 1226(c)(2). In short, § 1226(c) makes clear Congress’ intent that “aliens detained under [§ 1226(c)] are not entitled to be released under any circumstances other than those expressly recognized by the statute.” Jennings, 583 U.S. at 303. The “termination point” of detention under § 1226(c) is thus usually “the conclusion of removal proceedings,” and no earlier. Id. (quoting Demore, 538 U.S. at 529).

The Supreme Court has upheld § 1226(c) as facially constitutional. Demore, 538 U.S. at 531. The Court reasoned that “Congress, justifiably concerned that deportable criminal aliens who are not detained continue to engage in crime and fail to appear for their removal hearings in large numbers, may require that persons such as [the lawful permanent resident in that case] be detained for the brief period necessary for their removal proceedings.” Id. at 513. “The Supreme Court has also ruled that section 1226(c) itself authorizes prolonged detention.” Black v. Decker, 103 F.4th 133, 141–42 (2d Cir. 2024) (citing Jennings, 583 U.S. at 303).

An alien who is detained under § 1226(c) may request a hearing before an immigration judge to assess whether he fits into one of the categories of aliens set out in § 1226(c)(1)(A)–(D). See 8 C.F.R. §§ 1003.19(a), (b), & (h)(2)(ii); Matter of Joseph, 22 I. & N. Dec. 799 (BIA 1999). Such custody redetermination hearings are commonly referred to as “Joseph hearings.” The initial burden at a Joseph hearing is on ICE to establish that there is “reason to believe” that the detained alien is deportable or inadmissible under a ground listed in § 1226(c)(1)(A)–(D). Matter of Joseph, 22 I. & N. Dec. at 803. Once ICE has carried its initial burden, an alien “may avoid mandatory detention by demonstrating [at a Joseph hearing] that he is not an alien, was not convicted of the predicate crime, or that [ICE] is otherwise substantially unlikely to establish that he is in fact subject to mandatory detention.” Demore, 538 U.S. at 514 n.3 (citing 8 C.F.R. § 3.19(h)(2)(ii), Matter of Joseph, 22 I. & N. Dec. 799). If the alien carries his burden at a Joseph hearing and demonstrates that he is not properly subject to detention under § 1226(c), he will then be eligible to receive a bond hearing under § 1226(a).

ARGUMENT

THE HABEAS PETITION SHOULD BE DENIED

I. M.P.L.’s Continued Detention Comports with Due Process

M.P.L. does not contest that § 1226(c), as a statutory matter, unambiguously requires that he be detained without a bond hearing for the duration of his removal proceedings. See Pet. ¶ 10. Instead, he argues that his mandatory detention without a bond hearing violates his due process rights because it has become unconstitutionally prolonged. Id. ¶¶ 10, 54. But M.P.L.’s removal proceedings have moved swiftly and there is nothing in the record to support M.P.L.’s contention that his removal proceedings, and incident detention, have been unreasonably prolonged, whether by unreasonable governmental delay or otherwise. Simply put, M.P.L.’s detention during his ongoing removal proceedings—at this point, during M.P.L.’s appeal from his removal order—continues to serve the statutory purpose of § 1226(c) and is not otherwise unconstitutional. Thus, the Court should deny M.P.L.’s petition.

The Second Circuit has held that while due process does not require a bond hearing in the ordinary course for those detained under § 1226(c), there are certain instances in which detention under § 1226(c) might become unreasonably prolonged so as to necessitate “additional procedural protections,” such as a bond hearing. Black, 103 F.4th at 145. The Second Circuit further held in Black that due process challenges under § 1226(c) should be reviewed under the case-by-case analysis set forth by the Supreme Court in Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319 (1976), which takes into consideration: (i) the private liberty interest affected, (ii) the risk of erroneous deprivation of that interest and the probable value of additional procedural safeguards, and (iii) the government’s interest, including the function involved and the burdens that additional procedural requirements would create. Id. at 147. Evaluating the Mathews factors in the current case, the Court should conclude that M.P.L. is not entitled to any additional process at this time.

Regarding the first factor—the nature of the private interest that will be affected—the government does not dispute that an alien’s liberty is at issue. That liberty interest, however, is not absolute: aliens charged with being removable or inadmissible have no fundamental right to be released during removal proceedings. See, e.g., Jennings, 583 U.S. at 289 (recognizing that the INA authorizes the detention of both aliens seeking admission to the country, as well as those already in the country pending the outcome of removal proceedings); Demore, 538 U.S. at 523 (“[While the] Fifth Amendment entitles aliens to due process of law in deportation proceedings, detention during deportation proceedings [is] a constitutionally valid aspect of the deportation process.”). Any assessment of the private interests at stake must therefore account for the fact that the Supreme Court has never held that aliens have a constitutional right to be released from custody during the pendency of removal proceedings, and has in fact held precisely the opposite. Demore, 538 U.S. at 530; Carlson, 342 U.S. at 538. And there is a category of aliens, like M.P.L., who Congress has already determined are ineligible for release during their removal proceedings. See 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c).

As to the second Mathews factor—the comparative risk of an erroneous deprivation of an alien’s liberty interest with and without additional or substitute procedural safeguards—M.P.L. argues that his “present confinement directly stems from the inadequacy of protective procedures against erroneous deprivation of his liberty interest.” Pet. ¶ 47. In particular, M.P.L. takes issue with the application of § 1226(c) to him on the ground that he had provided material support to MS-13, subjecting him to the terrorism-related inadmissibility grounds (“TRIG”) bar under 8

U.S.C. § 1182(a)(3)(B). Id. But M.P.L. fails to meaningfully consider “the fairness and reliability of the existing . . . procedures, and the probable value if any, of additional procedural safeguards,” Mathews, 424 U.S. at 343, which have been and remain available to address M.P.L.’s concerns in this regard. Indeed, M.P.L. has a merits appeal pending with the BIA, in which he presumably will raise many of the nuanced TRIG-bar arguments that he makes here, including the lack of an implied duress exception and the immigration judge’s alleged erroneous retroactive application of the bar to him. Id. ¶¶ 48, 49.

Moreover, an alien like M.P.L. who is detained under § 1226(c) has another procedural safeguard: he can file a motion before an immigration judge requesting an assessment of whether he fits into one of the categories of aliens set out in § 1226(c)(1)(A)–(D)—i.e., a Joseph hearing. See 8 C.F.R. §§ 1003.19(a), (b), and (h)(2)(ii); Matter of Joseph, 22 I. & N. Dec. 799 (BIA 1999). If M.P.L. were to carry his burden at a Joseph hearing and demonstrate that he is not properly subject to detention under § 1226(c), he would then be eligible to receive a bond hearing under § 1226(a). And if he is unsuccessful before the immigration judge, he may also appeal that determination to the BIA. The Joseph hearing is a procedural mechanism available to M.P.L. and would address the exact issue he claims subjects him to an erroneous deprivation of his liberty (i.e., whether he is properly subject to mandatory detention), which cuts strongly in the government’s favor.

Regarding the third Mathews factor, the government’s interests in “ensuring the noncitizen’s appearance at proceedings” and “protecting the community from noncitizens who have been involved in crimes that Congress has determined differentiate them from others . . . are legitimate and their importance well-established.” Black, 103 F.4th at 153 (citing Demore, 538 U.S. at 518–21); cf. Velasco Lopez v. Decker, 978 F.3d 842, 854 (2d Cir. 2020) (recognizing that the government's important interests in detaining aliens to ensure they do not abscond and do not commit crimes are "well-established and not disputed"). M.P.L. argues that those interests are minimal here because he is "neither a danger nor a flight risk." Pet. ¶ 51. But he admitted to being part of a notoriously violent gang, MS-13. Morrow Decl. ¶ 6. And on this factor, he again claims that he should not be subject to the TRIG bar and, further, that he "lack[s] [a] criminal history in the United States." Pet. ¶ 51; see also id. ¶ 52 (claiming M.P.L. "has no criminal history"). As noted above, M.P.L.'s arguments regarding the application of the TRIG bar to him should be made in immigration court in the first instance, where his removal proceedings are pending. And his claim regarding his criminal history is at best misleading: while it is true that M.P.L. has never faced criminal charges in the United States, his RAP sheet shows that he was arrested in October 2006 in El Salvador for, among other things, aggravated homicide. Gov't Return Ex. 2 at 1–2. At present, M.P.L. has been detained for five months as his removal proceedings move swiftly along, and "the government's legitimate interests justify a relatively short-term deprivation of liberty." Black, 103 F.4th at 154. In Demore, the alien had already "spen[t] six months" in immigration custody before the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of his mandatory detention without a bond hearing—and in that case, the alien had not yet had his merits hearing. Demore, 538 U.S. at 530–31. Additionally, at this point, the added time is needed only to accommodate relief requested by M.P.L.—his appeal to the BIA. The government's interests continue to be served while his removal proceedings run their course.

M.P.L. can therefore not show, under Mathews, that his immigration detention violates procedural due process.<sup>2</sup>

II. M.P.L.’s Requests for Additional Procedural Requirements at Any Bond Hearing Should Be Denied

For all of the reasons explained above, M.P.L.’s mandatory detention is both statutorily mandated and constitutional, and he is not entitled to receive a bond hearing. Even if he were, certain additional requirements at any such bond hearing that M.P.L. seeks—that ability to pay bond and alternatives to detention be considered for both flight risk and danger, Pet. ¶ 2 & Prayer for Relief, ¶ 3—should be denied.

The government recognizes that, consistent with Second Circuit’s decision in Black, should this Court find that M.P.L.’s detention without a bond hearing has become unconstitutionally prolonged and that he is entitled to receive a bond hearing, ICE would have the burden of proving at that bond hearing by clear and convincing evidence the need for M.P.L.’s continued detention (i.e., that he is either a danger to the community or a flight risk). 103. F.4th at 157–58.<sup>3</sup> The government further recognizes that Black suggests that an immigration judge should consider an alien’s ability to pay and alternatives to detention with respect to flight risk. Id. at 158. But there

<sup>2</sup> M.P.L. complains that he has been subjected to “conditions equivalent to criminal incarceration” at Orange County Jail, Pet. ¶ 31, where he is housed only with other ICE detainees. Morrow Decl. ¶ 9. But that complaint is not part of his Mathews analysis and has no impact on the Court’s assessment of whether M.P.L.’s right to procedural due process has been violated. See, e.g., Gutierrez v. Dubois, No. 20 Civ. 2079 (PGG), 2020 WL 3072242, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. June 10, 2020) (concluding that petitioner’s detention at Orange County Jail “does not weigh heavily in favor of either side” in the due process analysis where petitioner was “housed in a separate unit at the Orange County Jail . . . and that unit contains only ICE detainees”).

<sup>3</sup> The government respectfully disagrees with the Second Circuit’s decision in Black, including its determination concerning the quantum and allocation of the burden of proof, and the government has petitioned the Second Circuit for rehearing of that decision, which is still pending. See Black v. Decker, 2d Cir. No. 20-3224. Nonetheless, the government acknowledges that, unless and until the Second Circuit’s decision is vacated, overruled, or abrogated, it remains good law.

is no basis to require an immigration judge to consider ability to pay and alternatives to detention with respect to danger, and so the Court should reject M.P.L.'s request for such a requirement.

M.P.L.'s request is contrary to the Second Circuit's decision in Black. In considering whether and how an immigration judge should consider an alien's ability to pay and alternatives to detention, the Second Circuit squarely held that the ability to pay and alternatives were only to assure the alien's appearance (i.e., address flight risk), and such considerations are relevant "only once the IJ has determined that the noncitizen does not pose a danger to the community." Black, 103 F.4th at 158–59 (citing Carlson, 342 U.S. at 539–42 (finding no due process violation where there is cause to believe alien's release would pose a safety risk); Matter of Guerra, 24 I. & N. Dec. 37, 38 (BIA 2006) ("An alien who presents a danger to persons or property should not be released during the pendency of removal proceedings.")). It is only "[a]t that point, [that] refusing to consider ability to pay and alternative means of assuring appearance creates a serious risk that the noncitizen will erroneously be deprived of the right to liberty purely for financial reasons." Id. at 158. Indeed, the court further "stress[ed] that a showing of dangerousness by clear and convincing evidence would foreclose any possibility of bond. The IJ would then have no reason to consider financial circumstances or alternatives to detention." Id. at 159. Put simply, the Second Circuit recognized that dangerousness is different from flight risk, and due process does not require consideration of alternatives to detention when dangerousness is shown.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the petition for a writ of habeas corpus should be denied.
