Respondents' opposition to Petitioners' TRO application ignores the two previous district court decisions which have addressed the new DHS and Department of Justice policy used to detain Petitioners without bond pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A). The U.S. District Courts for the Western District of Washington and District of Massachusetts have found that Respondents' new bond policy and new interpretation of the Immigration & Nationality Act is likely unlawful and that 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a), not § 1225(b), applies to noncitizens who were not apprehended at or near the border upon arrival to the United States and are placed under removal proceedings. Rodriguez Vazquez v. Bostock, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, 2025 WL 1193850 (W.D. Wash. Apr. 24, 2025); see also Gomes v. Hyde, No. 1:25-CV-11571-JEK, 2025 WL 1869299, at *8 (D. Mass. July 7, 2025) (granting habeas petition based on same conclusion).

And while Respondents' acknowledge (Opp. to TRO at 1, Dkt. 7 at 9), they do not engage with the recent TRO issued by this Court in a case with identical facts, Maldonado Bautista et al. v. Santacruz, et al., No. 5:25-cv-01873-SSS-BFM (C.D. Calif. July 28, 2025), Dkt. 14 at 9. ("[T]he Court finds that the potential for Petitioners' continued detention without an initial bond hearing ... violates statutory rights afforded under § 1226(a).")

Respondents argue that Petitioners' claims are barred by different jurisdictional provisions in 8 U.S.C. § 1252, but Supreme Court and Ninth Circuit precedent squarely foreclose those arguments.

8 U.S.C. 1252(g) Does Not Bar This Court's Jurisdiction.

Respondents argue that 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g) bars Petitioners' claims because their "detention arises from the decision to commence [removal] proceedings."

Opp. to TRO at 6, Dkt. 7 at 14. But Petitioners do not challenge any decision to "commence proceedings" within the meaning of § 1252(g). Accepting Respondents' interpretation would bar nearly all detention challenges brought by noncitizens, at odds with the narrow interpretation of this subsection that courts have consistently adopted.

As the Supreme Court has explained, § 1252(g) is "much narrower" than what Respondents claim. Reno v. Am.-Arab Anti-Discrimination Comm. (AADC), 525 U.S. 471, 482 (1999). Rather than encompass "all deportation-related cases," id. at 478, § 1252(g) insulates from litigation the immigration authorities' "exercise of [their] discretion," id. at 484 (emphasis added), with respect to the three specified actions: "commenc[ing] proceedings, adjudicat[ing] cases, [and] execut[ing] removal orders," id. at 483 (alterations in original). The subsection was "directed against a particular evil: attempts to impose judicial constraints upon prosecutorial discretion." Id. at 485 n.9; see also id. at 485 (providing as an example of such prosecutorial discretion "no deferred action' decisions and similar discretionary determinations"). Indeed, the Court found it "implausible" that "the mention of three discrete events along the road to deportation was a shorthand way of referring to all claims arising from deportation proceedings." Id. at 482.

Subsequent Supreme Court precedent has affirmed § 1252(g)'s narrow scope and focus on discretionary decisions. See, e.g., Dep't of Homeland Sec. v. Regents of the Univ. of California, 591 U.S. 1, 19 (2020) (noting § 1252(g) is "narrow").

With these principles in mind, 1252(g) does not "sweep in any claim that can technically be said to 'arise from' the three listed actions," including challenges to the proper interpretation of the INA's detention provisions. Jennings v. Rodriguez, 583 U.S. 281, 294 (2018). In fact, although the Supreme Court has reviewed several cases involving the government's application of immigration detention authorities, it has never held that such claims might be barred by § 1252(g)—including in cases concerning § 1226. See Jennings, 583 U.S. 281 (§§ 1226 & 1225); Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678 (2001) (§ 1231); Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510 (2003) (§ 1226); Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, 594 U.S. 523 (2021) (§§ 1226 & 1231); Johnson v. Arteaga-Martinez, 596 U.S. 573 (2022) (§ 1231). That omission is significant because "courts, including th[e] [Supreme] Court, have an independent obligation to determine whether subject-matter jurisdiction exists, even in the absence of a challenge from any party." Arbaugh v. Y&H Corp., 546 U.S. 500, 514 (2006). Moreover, in Jennings, the Court expressly reiterated that § 1252(g) must be "read . . . to refer to just those three specific actions themselves." 583 U.S. at 294.

Petitioners do not challenge any discretionary action to "commence proceedings." Rather, they challenge Respondents' conclusion that they are subject to mandatory detention while those proceedings take place. Cf. 8 C.F.R. § 1003.19(d) (noting IJ consideration of requests for "custody or bond . . . shall be separate and apart from, and shall form no part of, any deportation or removal hearing or proceeding"). Determining the detention provision under which Petitioners are detained is not discretionary, nor does resolving that question challenge Respondents' discretionary decision to place Petitioners in removal proceedings. See United States v. Hovsepian, 359 F.3d 1144, 1155 (9th Cir. 2004) (clarifying § 1252(g) does not prevent district court jurisdiction over "a purely legal question that does not challenge the Attorney General's discretionary authority, even if the answer to that legal question—a description of the relevant law—forms the backdrop against which the Attorney General later will exercise discretionary authority"). As a result, § 1252(g) does not bar Petitioners' claims.

8 U.S.C. 1252(b)(9) Does Not Bar This Court's Jurisdiction.

Respondents' argument with respect to § 1252(b)(9) is similarly and directly foreclosed by binding Supreme Court precedent. Section 1252(b)(9) is a "zipper clause" that channels review of final orders of removal into petitions for review before a federal court of appeals. J.E.F.M. v. Lynch, 837 F.3d 1026, 1031 (9th Cir. 2016) (en banc) (quoting AADC, 525 U.S. at 483). Respondents contend that § 1252(b)(9) applies here because "Petitioners challenge the government's decision and action to detain them, which arises from DHS's decision to commence removal proceedings, and is thus []an action taken [] to remove [them] from the United States." Opp. to TRO at 8, Dkt. 7 at 16.

Despite Respondents' reliance on Jennings, Jennings squarely refutes this argument. There, similar to here, the Court addressed a statutory interpretation question regarding bond hearings under § 1226 and § 1225. Before reaching the merits, the Court first addressed whether such detention could be said to "aris[e] from' the actions taken to remove" the noncitizen class members in Jennings, thus barring the claims under § 1252(b)(9). 583 U.S. at 293 (alteration in original). The Court rejected that proposition—i.e., the same one Respondents now make—as "absurd." Id. As the Court explained:

Interpreting "arising from" in this extreme way would also make claims of prolonged detention effectively unreviewable. By the time a final order of removal was eventually entered, the allegedly excessive detention would have already taken place. And of course, it is possible that no such order would ever be entered in a particular case, depriving that detainee of any meaningful chance for judicial review.

Id. Here it is no different. In fact, Respondents' position is now even more extreme. Petitioners assert that they are detained under § 1226(a) and thus are entitled to a bond hearing at the outset of their detention, rather than after prolonged detention, as in Jennings. Forcing them to wait years for a petition for review to resolve that claim would "depriv[e] [them] . . . of any meaningful chance for judicial review."

Id. Once again, it is notable that the Supreme Court has never demanded that noncitizens like Petitioners raise their challenges to detention in a petition for review in any of the immigration detention challenges the Court has heard. See supra p. 3 (citing cases).

Furthermore, in a similar context, the Ninth Circuit held that § 1252(b)(9) does not bar review. See Gonzalez v. United States Immigr. & Customs Enf't, 975 F.3d 788, 810 (9th Cir. 2020) ("Section 1252(b)(9) is also not a bar to jurisdiction over noncitizen class members' claims because claims challenging the legality of detention pursuant to an immigration detainer are independent of the removal process."). Respondents do not address this case.

The cases Respondents do cite provide them no support. Many do not even involve detention. See, e.g., Opp. to TRO at 7-8, Dkt. 7 at 15-16 (citing out-of-circuit cases involving challenges related to removal orders or other immigration actions). Lacking any directly relevant authority, Respondents cite to Justice Thomas's concurrence in judgment in Jennings. Opp. to TRO at 9, Dkt. 7 at 17. But that concurrence is more accurately described as a dissent regarding the majority's jurisdictional conclusion as to § 1252(b)(9). See 583 U.S. at 314–23 (Thomas, J., concurring in judgment). Of course, "[t]his view is not the law." Smith v. McCormick, 914 F.2d 1153, 1163 (9th Cir. 1990) (rejecting argument that relied on a Supreme Court dissent).

Finally, Respondents mischaracterize Petitioners' claims by asserting that Petitioners' challenge to the basis for their detention is actually "a challenge to
