I. Introduction

Petitioner seeks a writ of habeas corpus pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241 to challenge her recent detention by Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE). Petitioner alleges that he cannot be subject to mandatory immigration detention but, rather, is entitled to a bond hearing in immigration court. But as explained herein, Petitioner is not entitled to any relief.

Petitioner is instead lawfully detained on a mandatory basis as an alien present in the United States without inspection or parole (i.e., as someone who entered the country illegally) under the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA). See 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2). To the extent there was ever an ambiguity regarding whether such aliens were entitled to a bond hearing in immigration court, the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) resolved that issue in a September 2025 precedential decision holding that immigration courts are not authorized to entertain bond requests by aliens present in the United States without being admitted or paroled. Matter of Yajure-Hurtado, 29 I. & N. Dec. 216 (BIA 2025). Such aliens are instead subject to mandatory detention under § 1225(b)(2) as applicants for admission. Moreover, to the extent Petitioner complains of alleged due process violations, the fact remains that Petitioner is in full removal proceedings in immigration court, as opposed to expedited removal proceedings, and therefore is being provided with robust due process protections (including available judicial review upon the completion of administrative proceedings). Release on bond is not one of the protections guaranteed by statute, but that does not offend the Constitution. The petition should be denied.

II. Background

The petitioner is a native and citizen of Venezuela. App. p.2. Petitioner entered the United States near Eagle Pass, Texas, on December 1, 2021, without admission or parole after inspection. Id. Petitioner was placed in removal proceedings with a Notice to Appear (NTA) on January 22, 2022. Id. The NTA charged Petitioner with removability as an alien present in the United States without being admitted or paroled. Id. On October 31, 2022, Petitioner filed her I-589, Application for Asylum and for Withholding of Removal. App. p. 12. Petitioner's next mast hearing in his removal case is set for February 3, 2026. App. p. 14.

Meanwhile, Petitioner has also filed this habeas action, in which she argues that her detention does not fall under 8 U.S.C. § 1225 but rather is properly understood to fall under a separate provision, at 8 U.S.C. § 1226, which allows for a bond hearing in immigration court, or that she is otherwise entitled to a bond hearing in immigration court by order of this Court.

III. Relevant Immigration Law

This case implicates the interplay of various statutes that govern the civil detention of illegal aliens (1) pending a decision on removal, (2) during the administration of removal orders, and (3) in preparation for removal. See generally 8 U.S.C. §§ 1225, 1226, 1231. Properly construed, these statutes provide that individuals such as Petitioner are considered applicants for admission to the United States and are therefore subject to mandatory detention under § 1225.

A. Inspection and detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1225

“To implement its immigration policy, the Government must be able to decide (1) who may enter the country and (2) who may stay here after entering.” Jennings v. Rodriguez, 583 U.S. 281, 286 (2018). Section 1225 governs inspection, the initial step in this process, id., stating that all alien “applicants for admission . . . shall be inspected by immigration officers.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(3). The statute—in a provision entitled “ALIENS TREATED AS APPLICANTS FOR ADMISSION”—dictates who “shall be deemed for purposes of this chapter an applicant for admission,” defining that term to encompass both an alien “present in the United States who has not been admitted or [one] who arrives in the United States . . . .” Id. § 1225(a)(1) (emphasis added).

Paragraph (b) of § 1225 governs the inspection procedures applicable to all applicants for admission. They “fall into one of two categories, those covered by § 1225(b)(1) and those covered by § 1225(b)(2).” Jennings, 583 U.S. at 287. Section 1225(b)(1) applies to those “arriving in the United States” and “certain other”<sup>1</sup> aliens “initially determined to be inadmissible due to fraud, misrepresentation, or lack of valid documentation.” Id. § 1225(b)(1)(A)(i),(iii). Aliens falling under this subsection are generally subject to expedited removal proceedings “without further hearing or review.”

<sup>1</sup> “Certain other aliens” are addressed in Section 1225(b)(1)(A)(iii), which gives the Attorney General the sole discretion to apply (b)(1)’s expedited procedures to an alien who “has not been admitted or paroled into the United States, and who has not affirmatively shown, to the satisfaction of an immigration officer, that the alien has been physically present in the United States continuously for the 2-year period immediately prior to the date of the determination of inadmissibility,” subject to an exception inapplicable here. The statute therefore explicitly confirms application of its inspection procedures for those already in the country, including those who have been in the country for a period of years.

See id. § 1225(b)(1)(A)(i). But where the applicant “indicates an intention to apply for asylum . . . or a fear of persecution,” immigration officers will refer him or her for a credible fear interview. Id. § 1225(b)(1)(A)(ii). An applicant “with a credible fear of persecution” is “detained for further consideration of the application for asylum.” Id. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(ii). If the alien does not indicate an intent to apply for asylum, express a fear of persecution, or is “found not to have such a fear,” he is detained until removal from the United States. Id. § 1225(b)(1)(A)(i), (B)(iii)(IV).

Section 1225(b)(2) is “broader” than (b)(1), “serv[ing] as a catchall provision that applies to all applicants for admission not covered by § 1225(b)(1).” Jennings, 583 U.S. at 287. Subject to exceptions not applicable here, “if the examining immigration officer determines that the alien seeking admission is not clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted, the alien shall be detained for a removal proceeding.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A) (emphasis added); see also Matter of Q. Li, 29 I. & N. Dec. 66, 68 (BIA 2025) (“for aliens arriving in and seeking admission into the United States who are placed directly in full removal proceedings, section 235(b)(2)(A) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A), mandates detention ‘until removal proceedings have concluded.’”) (citing Jennings, 583 U.S. at 299). The only exception is that DHS—not the immigration court—retains sole discretionary authority to temporarily release on parole “any alien applying for admission” on a “case-by-case basis for urgent humanitarian reasons or significant public benefit.” 8 U.S.C. § 1182(d)(5)(A); see Biden v. Texas, 597 U.S. 785, 806 (2022).

B. Apprehension and discretionary detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a)

“Even once inside the United States, aliens do not have an absolute right to remain here. For example, an alien present in the country may still be removed if he or she falls ‘within one or more . . . classes of deportable aliens.’ §1227(a).” Jennings, 583 U.S. at 288 (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a), which outlines “classes of deportable aliens” among those already “in and admitted to the United States”) (emphasis added)). “Section 1226 generally governs the process of arresting and detaining that group of aliens pending their removal.” Id. “[O]n a warrant issued by the Attorney General,” it provides that an alien may be arrested and detained pending a decision” on the removal. 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a). For aliens arrested under §1226(a), the Attorney General and the DHS have broad discretionary authority to detain an alien during removal proceedings.<sup>2</sup> See 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a)(1) (DHS “may continue to detain the arrested” alien during the pendency of removal proceedings).

Following apprehension under § 1226(a), a DHS officer makes an initial discretionary determination concerning release. See 8 C.F.R. § 236.1(c)(8). DHS “may continue to detain the alien.” 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a)(1). “To secure release, the alien must show that he does not pose a danger to the community and that he is likely to appear for <sup>2</sup> Although the relevant statutory sections refer to the Attorney General, the Homeland Security Act of 2002, Pub. L. No. 107-296, 116 Stat. 2135 (2002), transferred all immigration enforcement and administration functions vested in the Attorney General, with few exceptions, to the Secretary of Homeland Security. The Attorney General’s authority—delegated to immigration judges, see 8 C.F.R. § 1003.19(d)—to detain, or authorize bond for aliens under section 1226(a) is “one of the authorities he retains . . . although this authority is shared with [DHS] because officials of that department make the initial determination whether an alien will remain in custody during removal proceedings.” Matter of D-J-, 23 I. & N. Dec. 572, 574 n.3 (A.G. 2003).

future proceedings.” Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, 594 U.S. 523, 527 (2021) (citing 8 C.F.R. §§ 236.1(c)(8), 1236.1(c)(8)); Matter of Adeniji, 22 I. & N. Dec. 1102, 1113 (BIA 1999)). If DHS decides to release, it may set a bond or condition the release. See 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a)(2); 8 C.F.R. § 236.1(c)(8).

If DHS determines that an alien should remain detained during the pendency of his removal proceedings, the alien may request a bond hearing in immigration court. See 8 C.F.R. §§ 236.1(d)(1), 1003.19, 1236.1(d). The immigration court conducts a bond hearing and decides whether release is warranted, based on a variety of factors that account for ties to the United States and risks of flight or danger to the community. See In re Guerra, 24 I. & N. Dec. 37, 40 (BIA 2006) (identifying nine non-exhaustive factors); 8 C.F.R. § 1003.19(d) (“The determination . . . as to custody status or bond may be based upon any information that is available to the Immigration Judge or that is presented to him or her by the alien or [DHS].”).

Section 1226(a) does not grant “any right to release on bond.” Matter of D-J-, 23 I. & N. Dec. at 575 (citing Carlson v. Landon, 342 U.S. 524, 534 (1952)). Nor does it address the applicable burden of proof or particular factors that must be considered. See generally 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a). Rather, it grants DHS and the Attorney General broad discretionary authority to determine, after arrest, whether to detain or release an alien during his removal proceedings. See id. If, after the bond hearing, either party disagrees with the decision of the immigration court, that party may appeal that decision to the BIA. See 8 C.F.R. §§ 236.1(d)(3), 1003.19(f), 1003.38, 1236.1(d)(3). Included within the Attorney General and DHS’s discretionary authority are limitations on the delegation of that authority to the immigration court. Under 8 C.F.R. § 1003.19(h)(2)(i)(B), the immigration court does not have authority to redetermine the conditions of custody imposed by DHS for any arriving alien.

C. The BIA's role

The BIA is an administrative appellate body within the Department of Justice that essentially serves as the court of appeals for the immigration court system. See 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(1). Members of the BIA possess delegated authority from the Attorney General. Id. § 1003.1(a)(1). The BIA is “charged with the review of those administrative adjudications under the [INA] that the Attorney General may by regulation assign to it,” including custody determinations. Id. §§ 1003.1(d)(1), 236.1, 1236.1. The BIA not only resolves particular disputes before it, but also “through precedent decisions, [it] shall provide clear and uniform guidance to DHS, the immigration judges, and the general public on the proper interpretation and administration of the [INA] and its implementing regulations.” Id. § 1003.1(d)(1). “The decision of the [BIA] shall be final except in those cases reviewed by the Attorney General.” Id. § 1003.1(d)(7).

IV. Argument and Authorities

As explained below, Petitioner is not entitled to any relief in this proceeding because (a) the INA authorizes her detention without bond, and (b) the Due Process Clause does not require that Petitioner receive a bond hearing. See Zuniga v. Lyons, ___ F. Supp. 3d ___, 2025 WL 3755126 (N.D. Tex. 2025) (rejecting similar claims by an immigration detainee).

A. The INA authorizes Petitioner's detention without bond.

Petitioner's claims implicate the interplay between 8 U.S.C. §§ 1225 and 1226. Section 1225(b)(2)(A), the INA's mandatory-detention provision, sets out detention requirements for "applicant[s] for admission" to the United States. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A). Specifically, "in the case of an alien who is an applicant for admission, if the examining immigration officer determines that an alien seeking admission is not clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted, the alien shall be detained for a proceeding under section 1229a of this title." Id. It is undisputed that, subject to certain narrow exceptions,<sup>3</sup> § 1225(b)(2)(A) "mandate[s] detention of applicants for admission until certain [removal] proceedings have concluded." Jennings, 583 U.S. at 297. Nothing in § 1225 "says anything whatsoever about bond hearings." Id.

Section 1226(a), on the other hand, permits discretionary detention. "On a warrant issued by the Attorney General, an alien may be arrested and detained pending a decision on whether the alien is to be removed from the United States." 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a). Instead of detention, the Attorney General "may" release the alien on bond, "[e]xcept as provided in subsection (c)." Id. § 1226(a), (2)(A)–(B). Section 1226(c) in turn requires the Attorney General to "take into custody any alien" who is inadmissible or removable for involvement in certain criminal offenses. Id. § 1226(c)(1)(A)–(E); see Jennings, 583 U.S. at 303. If § 1226(c) does not apply, and if an alien is released on bond pending removal, the Attorney General may still re-detain him "at any time." 8 U.S.C. § 1226(b).

<sup>3</sup> In particular, DHS has the discretionary authority to temporarily parole certain aliens who otherwise are subject to mandatory detention. See 8 U.S.C. § 1182(d)(5)(A).

Here, the question is whether Petitioner—who crossed the border without being admitted or inspected—is an “applicant for admission.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A). If so, Petitioner “shall be detained” without bond. Id. If not, Petitioner would be entitled to a bond hearing under § 1226(a).

1. As an “applicant for admission,” Petitioner is subject to mandatory detention without bond under § 1225(b)(2)(A).

The Court’s analysis should “begin[] with the statutory text, and end[] there as well if the text is unambiguous.” BedRoc Ltd., LLC v. United States, 541 U.S. 176, 183 (2004). That is the situation here. Section 1225 broadly defines “applicant for admission” as “[a]n alien present in the United States who has not been admitted or who arrives in the United States.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(1). Petitioner is undoubtedly an “alien.” And she is “present in the United States.” And she “has not been admitted” because she did not “lawful[ly] ent[er] [the country] after inspection and authorization by an immigration officer.” Id. § 1101(a)(13)(A) (defining “admission” and “admitted”). As an “applicant for admission” who “is not clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted,” Petitioner “shall be detained” under § 1225(b)(2)(A), and therefore is not entitled to a bond hearing.

Petitioner’s claim otherwise essentially hinges on an argument that the concept of an “applicant for admission” should apply only to aliens who are arriving in the country and are apprehended or encountered at the border or a port of entry. See ECF 1, at ¶ 52. But this sort of argument—which would limit the term “applicant for admission” to arriving aliens—is contrary to the plain text of the statute. Section 1225 expressly defines “applicant for admission,” and covers “[a]n alien present in the United States who has not been admitted or who arrives in the United States.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(1) (emphasis added). The word “or” is key. As the Supreme Court has often said, “‘or’ is ‘almost always disjunctive.’” Encino Motorcars, LLC v. Navarro, 584 U.S. 79, 87 (2018) (quoting United States v. Woods, 571 U.S. 31, 45 (2013)). And nothing in § 1225(b)(2)(A) suggests otherwise. Therefore, the term “applicant[s] for admission” does not just cover arriving aliens; it also covers aliens who, like Petitioner, are present in the United States—for decades even—without admission.

This interpretation tracks how other courts understand the term. In Jennings, the Supreme Court explained that, “[u]nder [Section 1225], an alien who ‘arrives in the United States,’ or ‘is present’ in this country but ‘has not been admitted,’ is treated as ‘an applicant for admission.’” 583 U.S. at 287 (quoting 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(1)). And the BIA—with its considerable expertise in immigration law—recognizes that Congress’ “unconventional” definition of “applicant for admission” includes “not just those who are expressly seeking permission to enter, but also those who are present in this country without having formally requested or received such permission.” Matter of Lemus-Losa, 25 I. & N. Dec. 734, 743 (BIA 2012). At any rate, “[w]hen a statute includes an explicit definition, [the Court] must follow that definition.” Digit. Realty Tr., Inc. v. Somers, 583 U.S. 149, 160 (2018) (quoting Burgess v. United States, 553 U.S. 124, 130 (2008)).

Confining the concept of an “applicant to admission” only to those seeking admission at or near the border would also elevate form over substance. “There is no material disjunction—by the terms of the statute or the English language—between the concept of ‘applying’ for something and ‘seeking’ something.” Garibay-Robledo v. Noem, ___ F. Supp. 3d ___, 2025 WL 3264482, at *5 (N.D. Tex. 2025). An “applicant” is “[s]omeone who requests something.” Applicant, Black’s Law Dictionary (12th ed. 2024). Thus, an “applicant for admission,” in ordinary English usage, is one who requests (or seeks) admission into the United States. See Apply (for), Merriam-Webster Thesaurus (noting that to “seek” is a synonym of to “apply” for). It is unclear how an alien can apply for admission without seeking it.

Other parts of § 1225 illustrate the point. Section 1225(a)(3) provides that “[a]ll aliens . . . [w]ho are applicants for admission or otherwise seeking admission . . . shall be inspected.” (emphasis added); see also Shi v. Lyons, ___ F. Supp. 3d ___, No. 1:25-CV-274, 2025 WL 3637288, at *5 (S.D. Tex. Dec. 12, 2025) (explaining that § 1225(a)(3)’s “use of ‘otherwise’ renders ‘applicants for admission’ a subset of ‘seeking admission’— i.e., the former represents one example of the latter”). And § 1225(a)(5) states that “[a]n applicant for admission may be required to state under oath any information sought by an immigration officer regarding the purposes and intentions of the applicant in seeking admission to the United States.” The logical import of this phrasing is that an “applicant for admission” is also “seeking admission” under the statute. “Insofar as the term ‘applicant for admission’ is more passive than ‘seeking admission,’ this is inherent in the nature of agent nouns and their corresponding gerunds.” Garibay-Robledo, 2025 WL 3264482, at *5. As such, § 1225 cannot be read to limit its application to aliens “arriving” at the border.

Indeed, if Congress wanted to limit § 1225(b)(2)(A) to arriving aliens, it could have done so. Neighboring provisions in § 1225 expressly refer to “arriving alien[s].” See, e.g., 8 U.S.C. §§ 1225(a)(2) (“arriving alien who is a stowaway is not eligible to apply for admission or to be admitted”), 1225(d)(2) (addressing “authority to order detention and delivery of arriving aliens” coming to the United States via vessel or aircraft). Yet Congress did not use “arriving alien” in § 1225(b)(2)(A). Generally, when Congress “uses certain language in one part of the statute and different language in another, the [C]ourt assumes different meanings were intended.” Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain, 542 U.S. 692, 711 n.9 (2004) (quotation omitted). So the fact that Congress did not refer to “arriving aliens” in § 1225(b)(2)(A), but did so in other parts of the statute, suggests that the mandatory detention provision is not limited to aliens arriving at the border.

In sum, Petitioner is subject to mandatory detention under § 1225(b)(2)(A). Even if Petitioner is not (or is no longer) an “arriving alien,” the statutory text is unambiguous: “[A]n alien present in the United States who has not been admitted” is also an “applicant for admission.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(1). And if an “applicant for admission” is “not clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted,” she “shall be detained” pending her removal proceedings. Id. § 1225(b)(2)(A). When a statute is this clear, it must be applied according to its terms. Carcieri v. Salazar, 555 U.S. 379, 387 (2009).

2. The statutory history of the INA confirms that § 1225’s mandatory-detention provision applies to aliens like Petitioner.

“Statutory history, ‘the record of enacted changes Congress made to the relevant statutory text over time,’ can also provide helpful context” for statutory interpretation.

United States v. Moore, 71 F.4th 392, 395 (5th Cir. 2023) (quoting BNSF Ry. Co. v. Loos, 586 U.S. 310, 329 (2019) (Gorsuch, J., dissenting) (emphasis omitted)). Here, the statutory history of the INA confirms what the plain text already makes clear: aliens who illegally entered the United States and are later apprehended in the interior are “applicant[s] for admission” who must be detained pending removal under § 1225(b)(2)(A).

In 1996, Congress added the broad definition of “applicant for admission” to the INA in the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act (IIRIRA). Pub. L. No. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009. “Prior to the [IIRIRA], the INA assessed status on the basis of ‘entry’ as opposed to ‘admission.’” Martinez v. Att’y Gen., 693 F.3d 408, 413 n.5 (3d Cir. 2012) (quoting 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(13) (1994)). Under this so-called entry doctrine, aliens who snuck into the United States without inspection were entitled to the procedural and substantive protections afforded in deportation proceedings. Id. Yet aliens who presented themselves to immigration officials for inspection—say, at a port of entry—were subject to “more summary exclusion proceedings.” Id. (quotation omitted). This distinction—where aliens who followed the rules and presented for inspection were worse off than those who broke the law—created “a perverse incentive to enter at an unlawful rather than a lawful location.” DHS v. Thuraissigiam, 591 U.S. 103, 140 (2020).

IIRIRA did away with this anomaly. Congress replaced the entry doctrine with a criterion based on admission, which it defined as “lawful entry . . . after inspection and authorization.” 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(13)(A) (emphasis added). Congress also added § 1225(a)(1)—the definition of “applicant for admission”—and mandated detention for all such applicants while their removal proceedings play out. See 8 U.S.C.

§ 1225(b)(2)(A). By defining “applicant for admission” to include all aliens who have not been admitted, Congress thus eliminated the previous incentives to enter the country illegally.

Adopting Petitioner’s argument that she is not subject to § 1225(b)(2)(A) would mark a return to those bygone days. On Petitioner’s view, aliens who bypass inspection and settle down in the interior have more procedural protections than aliens who present themselves for inspection at the border. But that, of course, is “the precise situation that Congress intended to do away with by enacting” IIRIRA. United States v. Gambino-Ruiz, 91 F.4th 981, 990 (9th Cir. 2024). Thus, the INA’s statutory history supports the view that § 1225(b)(2)(A) requires detention without bond for all applicants for admission—including those who entered the country illegally and have resided here for years.

B. The Due Process Clause does not require that Petitioner receive a bond hearing in immigration court.

Petitioner also claims that the unavailability of a bond hearing in immigration court violates the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. See ECF. 1, ¶ 57. But no theory of due process—whether “substantive” or “procedural” in nature—supports Petitioner’s case.

First, consider substantive due process. That doctrine protects “only those fundamental rights and liberties which are, objectively, deeply rooted in this Nation’s history and tradition.” Dep’t of State v. Muñoz, 602 U.S. 899, 910 (2024) (quoting Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702, 720–21 (1997)). While still recognizing due-process rights for aliens present in the United States, see, e.g., Trump v. J.G.G., 604 U.S. 670, 673 (2025), the Supreme Court has long affirmed the constitutionality of executive immigration procedures. The “through line of history,” the Supreme Court recently explained, is “recognition of the Government’s sovereign authority to set the terms governing the admission and exclusion of noncitizens.” Muñoz, 602 U.S. at 911–12. To that end, “Congress regularly makes rules that would be unacceptable if applied to citizens.” Mathews v. Diaz, 426 U.S. 67, 80 (1976).

The principle is no less true for immigration detention. In fact, the Supreme Court has endorsed the constitutionality of detaining aliens without bond during the pendency of removal proceedings. In Demore v. Kim, the Supreme Court acknowledged that “the Fifth Amendment entitles aliens to due process of law in deportation proceedings.” 538 U.S. 510, 523 (2003) (quoting Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. 292, 306 (1993)). But it clarified that “detention during deportation proceedings” is nevertheless a “constitutionally valid aspect of the deportation process.” Id. Indeed, “when the Government deals with deportable aliens, the Due Process Clause does not require it to employ the least burdensome means to accomplish its goal.” Id. at 528. It follows that “the Government may constitutionally detain deportable aliens during the limited period necessary for their removal proceedings.” Id. at 526. Against that backdrop, the notion that substantive due process requires a bond hearing is untenable.

A procedural due process claim fares no better. As an “applicant for admission,”

Petitioner has “only those rights regarding admission that Congress has provided by statute.” Thuraissigiam, 591 U.S. at 140; see Landon v. Plasencia, 459 U.S. 21, 32 (1982) (“This Court has long held that an alien seeking initial admission to the United States requests a privilege and has no constitutional rights regarding his application, for the power to admit or exclude aliens is a sovereign prerogative.”). With § 1225, Congress set the procedural rights afforded to aliens who are present in the United States without admission. “Read most naturally,” § 1225(b)(2)(A) “mandate[s] detention of applicants for admission until certain proceedings have concluded.” Jennings, 583 U.S. at 297. No part of the statute “says anything whatsoever about bond hearings.” Id. Accordingly, Petitioner is not entitled to a bond hearing as a matter of procedural due process.

V. Conclusion

The petition should be denied.
