NOTICE OF MOTION

Petitioner, Carlos Martin Lorenzana-Flores, applies to this honorable Court for a temporary restraining order enjoining Respondents Department of Homeland Security (DHS), U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), and Pam Bondi, in her official capacity as the U.S. Attorney General, (1) from continuing to detain Petitioner based on an unlawful action by ICE, (2) ordering his immediate release from immigration detention; and (3) from removing Petitioner from the United States.

If the Court deems oral argument necessary, Petitioner requests to appear by video.

Dated: December 18, 2025 Respectfully submitted,

Siovhan Ayala
Attorney for Petitioner

1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 Respondents unlawfully detain Petitioner, Carlos Martin Lorenzana-Flores, 3 under a mistaken assertion that INA § 235(b)(2) requires mandatory detention of 4 individuals who entered without inspection. Petitioner entered the United States on 5 2009 and has lived in the U.S ever since. He is not an “arriving alien” at the border 6 but a long-term resident, properly detained under INA § 236(a), which authorizes 7 bond hearings.

8 The Board of Immigration Appeals’ recent decision in Matter of Yajure 9 Hurtado, 29 I&N Dec. 216 (BIA 2025), does not compel a different result. Federal 10 habeas courts are not bound by BIA precedent, and numerous courts, including in 11 this Circuit have rejected DHS’s attempt to expand § 235(b)(2) to the interior.
12 Because DHS has improperly invoked § 235(b)(2), Petitioner has been deprived of 13 the opportunity for an individualized bond hearing and remains in unlawful 14 detention in violation of the INA, the APA, and the Constitution.

15 Petitioner meets the TRO standard. He is likely to succeed on the merits, he 16 faces immediate and irreparable harm from unlawful detention, and the equities and 17 public interest weigh heavily in his favor.

18
19 II. STATEMENT OF FACTS AND CASE

20 Petitioner is a native and citizen of Mexico. He entered the United States 21 without inspection on or about 2009, more than sixteen years ago and has resided in 22 the U.S for more than sixteen years. During this time, he established strong family 23 and community ties.

24
25 Petitioner applied for release on bond before the Immigration Court on 26 December 2, 2025. His request was denied on the ground that he classified as subject 27
28

1 to mandatory detention under INA § 235(b)(2), making him categorically ineligible 2 for a bond hearing.

3 Historically, individuals in Petitioner's position—those who entered without 4 inspection but were apprehended years later inside the United States—were detained 5 under § 236(a) and provided bond hearings before an Immigration Judge. For 6 decades, immigration judges adjudicated such custody matters under § 236(a).
7 Indeed, the BIA in Yajure acknowledged this longstanding practice, noting that 8 immigration courts have historically granted bond hearings to noncitizens 9 apprehended in the interior who had entered without inspection. Id. at 225.

11 Petitioner has been detained without the opportunity for a bond hearing. He has 12 requested relief through counsel, but DHS continues to maintain that his custody is 13 mandatory and that the court has no jurisdiction. Without judicial intervention, he 14 faces indefinite detention without due process, despite his long-standing residence 15 in the United States and his eligibility for release on bond under § 236(a).

17 LEGAL STANDARD

18 19 Petitioner is entitled to a temporary restraining order if he establishes that he 20 is “likely to succeed on the merits, . . . likely to suffer irreparable harm in the 21 absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in [her] favor, and that 22 an injunction is in the public interest.” Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 23 U.S. 7, 20 (2008); Stuhlberg Int’l Sales Co. v. John D. Brush & Co., 240 F.3d 832, 24 839 n.7 (9th Cir. 2001) (noting that preliminary injunction and temporary 25 restraining order standards are “substantially identical”). Even if Petitioner does not 26 show a likelihood of success on the merits, the Court may still grant a temporary 27 restraining order if he raises “serious questions” as to the merits of his claims, the 28

1 balance of hardships tips “sharply” in his favor, and the remaining equitable factors
2 are satisfied. Alliance for the Wild Rockies v. Cottrell, 632 F.3d 1127 (9th Cir.
3 2011). As set forth in more detail below, Petitioner overwhelmingly satisfies the 4 standards for a temporary restraining order.

5 III. ARGUMENT

6
7 A. PETITIONER WARRANTS A TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

8 A temporary restraining order should be issued if “immediate and irreparable 9 injury, loss, or irreversible damage will result” to the applicant in the absence of an 10 order. Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b). The purpose of a temporary restraining order is to 11 prevent irreparable harm before a preliminary injunction hearing is held.
12 See Granny Goose Foods, Inc. v. Bhd. Of Teamsters & Auto Truck Drivers Local 13 No. 70 of Alameda City, 415 U.S. 423, 439 (1974). Petitioner is likely to remain in 14 unlawful custody in violation of his due process rights without intervention by this 15 Court. Petitioner will continue to suffer irreparable injury if he continues to be 16 detained without due process.
17

18 1. Petitioner is Likely to Succeed on the Merits of His Claim That He be Released from Detention

19 Petitioner is likely to succeed on his claim that, in his particular 20 circumstances, his current detention is unlawful because the Due Process Clause 21 and the statute.
22

23 The District of Arizona has recognized that when the government seeks to 24 revoke or stay a noncitizen’s release from custody, due process under the Fifth 25 Amendment requires a meaningful opportunity to be heard before the deprivation 26 occurs. See Organista v. Sessions, No. CV-18-00285-PHX-GMS (D. Ariz. Feb. 8, 27 2018). Applying the familiar three-factor test from Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S.
28 319 (1976), the court weighed 1) the private liberty interest at stake; 2) the risk of 1 erroneous deprivation; and 3) the burden on the government – “the fundamental 2 requirement of due process – the opportunity to be heard at a meaningful time and 3 manner.” Organista, No. CV-18-00285-PHX-GMS, at 4.; City of Los Angeles v.

4 David, 538 U.S. 715, 717 (2003). In weighing the Matthews factors, the court 5 declared that “there is no meaningful dispute that Petitioner has a liberty interest in 6 being heard before the BIA can prolong her detention.” Organista, No. CV-18-7 00285-PHX-GMS, at 4.

8 Likewise, federal district courts in California have repeatedly recognized 9 that the demands of due process and the limitations on DHS’s authority to revoke a 10 noncitizen’s bond or parole set out in DHS’s stated practice and Matter of Sugay
11 both require a pre-deprivation hearing for a noncitizen on bond, like Petitioner 12 before ICE detains her. See, e.g., Ortega v. Bonnar, 415 F. Supp. 3d 963 (N.D. Cal.
13 2019); Vargas v. Jennings, No. 20-CV-5785-PJH, 2020 WL 5074312, at *3 (N.D.
14 Cal. Aug. 23, 2020); Jorge M. F. v. Wilkinson, No. 21-CV-01434-JST, 2021 WL 15 783561, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 1, 2021);); Romero v. Kaiser, No. 22-cv-02508-16 TSH, 2022 WL 1443250, at *3-4 (N.D. Cal. May 6, 2022) (Petitioner would suffer 17 irreparable harm if re-detained, and required notice and a hearing before any re-18 detention); Enamorado v. Kaiser, No. 25-CV-04072-NW, 2025 WL 1382859, at 19 *3 (N.D. Cal. May 12, 2025) (temporary injunction warranted preventing re-arrest 20 at plaintiff’s ICE interview when he had been on bond for more than five years).
21 See also Doe v. Becerra, No. 2:25-cv-00647-DJC-DMC, 2025 WL 691664, *4 22 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 3, 2025) (holding the Constitution requires a hearing before any re-23 arrest).
24

25 Courts analyze procedural due process claims such as this one in two steps: 26 the first asks whether there exists a protected liberty interest under the Due Process 27 Clause, and the second examines the procedures necessary to ensure any 28

1 deprivation of that protected liberty interest accords with the Constitution. See 2 Kentucky Dep't of Corrections v. Thompson, 490 U.S. 454, 460 (1989).

3 a. Petitioner Has a Protected Liberty Interest in His 4 Conditional Release

5 Petitioner's liberty from immigration custody is protected by the Due Process 6 Clause: "Freedom from imprisonment—from government custody, detention, or 7 other forms of physical restraint—lies at the heart of the liberty that [the Due 8 Process] Clause protects." Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678, 690 (2001).

9 Since 2009, Petitioner has lived continuously in the U.S, where he has 10 worked, supported his family, and built enduring community ties. He was 11 apprehended more than sixteen years after her entry, far from the border. Despite 12 these circumstances, DHS has categorized him as an "applicant for admission" 13 under § 235(b)(2) and placed him in mandatory detention, denying him the 14 opportunity for an individualized bond hearing. Accordingly, he retains a weighty 15 liberty interest under the Fifth Amendment in avoiding continued incarceration. See 16 Young v. Harper, 520 U.S. 143, 146–47 (1997); Gagnon v. Scarpelli, 411 U.S. 778, 17 781–82 (1973); Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 482–83 (1972).

18 In Morrissey, the Supreme Court examined the "nature of the interest" that a 19 parolee has in "his continued liberty." 408 U.S. at 481-82. The Court noted that, 20 "subject to the conditions of his parole, [a parolee] can be gainfully employed and 21 is free to be with family and friends and to form the other enduring attachments of 22 normal life." Id. at 482. The Court further noted that "the parolee has relied on at 23 least an implicit promise that parole will be revoked only if he fails to live up to the 24 parole conditions." Id. The Court explained that "the liberty of a parolee, although 25 indeterminate, includes many of the core values of unqualified liberty and its 26 termination inflicts a grievous loss on the parolee and often others." Id. In turn, 27
28

1 “[b]y whatever name, the liberty is valuable and must be seen within the protection 2 of the [Fifth] Amendment.” Morrissey, 408 U.S. at 482.

3 This basic principle—that individuals have a liberty interest in their 4 conditional release—has been reinforced by both the Supreme Court and the circuit 5 courts on numerous occasions. See, e.g., Young v. Harper, 520 U.S. at 152 (holding 6 that individuals placed in a pre-parole program created to reduce prison 7 overcrowding have a protected liberty interest requiring pre-deprivation process); 8 Gagnon v. Scarpelli, 411 U.S. at 781-82 (holding that individuals released on felony 9 probation have a protected liberty interest requiring pre-deprivation process). As 10 the First Circuit has explained, when analyzing the issue of whether a specific 11 conditional release rises to the level of a protected liberty interest, “[c]ourts have 12 resolved the issue by comparing the specific conditional release in the case before 13 them with the liberty interest in parole as characterized by Morrissey.” Gonzalez- 14 Fuentes v. Molina, 607 F.3d 864, 887 (1st Cir. 2010) (internal quotation marks and 15 citation omitted). See also, e.g., Hurd v. District of Columbia, 864 F.3d 671, 683 16 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (“a person who is in fact free of physical confinement—even if 17 that freedom is lawfully revocable—has a liberty interest that entitles her to 18 constitutional due process before he is re-incarcerated”) (citing Young, 520 U.S. at 19 152, Gagnon, 411 U.S. at 782, and Morrissey, 408 U.S. at 482).

21 In fact, it is well-established that an individual maintains a protectable liberty 22 interest even where the individual obtains liberty through a mistake of law or fact.
23 See id.; Gonzalez-Fuentes, 607 F.3d at 887; Johnson v. Williford, 682 F.2d 868, 873 24 (9th Cir. 1982) (noting that due process considerations support the notion that an 25 inmate released on parole by mistake, because he was serving a sentence that did 26 not carry a possibility of parole, could not be re-incarcerated because the mistaken 27 release was not his fault, and he had appropriately adjusted to society, so it “would 28

1 be inconsistent with fundamental principles of liberty and justice” to return her to 2 prison) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

3 Here, when this Court ““compares the release in Petitioner’s case, with the 4 liberty interest in parole as characterized by Morrissey,”” they bear similar features 5 in liberty interests. See Gonzalez-Fuentes, 607 F.3d at 887. Just as in Morrissey, 6 Petitioner’s release “enables her to do a wide range of things open to persons,” 7 including to live at home, work, care for his family, for whom he helps financially, 8 and “be with family and friends and to form the other enduring attachments of 9 normal life.” Morrissey, 408 U.S. at 482.

10 11 b. Petitioner’s Liberty Interest Mandates His Release from 12 Unlawful Custody

13 “Adequate, or due, process depends upon the nature of the interest affected.
14 The more important the interest and the greater the effect of its impairment, the 15 greater the procedural safeguards the [government] must provide to satisfy due 16 process.” Haygood v. Younger, 769 F.2d 1350, 1355-56 (9th Cir. 1985) (en banc) 17 (citing Morrissey, 408 U.S. at 481-82). This Court must “balance [Petitioner’s] 18 liberty interest against the [government’s] interest in the efficient administration of” 19 its immigration laws to determine what process he is owed to ensure that ICE does 20 not unconstitutionally deprive him of her liberty. Id. at 1357. Under the test set forth 21 in Mathews v. Eldridge, this Court must consider three factors in conducting its 22 balancing test: “first, the private interest that will be affected by the official action; 23 second, the risk of an erroneous deprivation of such interest through the procedures 24 used, and the probative value, if any, of additional or substitute procedural 25 safeguards; and finally the government’s interest, including the function involved 26 and the fiscal and administrative burdens that the additional or substitute procedural 27 requirements would entail.” Haygood, 769 F.2d at 1357 (citing Mathews v.
28

1 Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 335 (1976)).

2 The Supreme Court “usually has held that the Constitution requires some 3 kind of a hearing before the State deprives a person of liberty or property.”
4 Zinermon v. Burch, 494 U.S. 113, 127 (1990) (emphasis in original). Only in a 5 “special case” where post-deprivation remedies are “the only remedies the State 6 could be expected to provide” can post-deprivation process satisfy the requirements 7 of due process. Zinermon, 494 U.S. at 985. Moreover, only where “one of the 8 variables in the Mathews equation—the value of deprivation safeguards—is 9 negligible in preventing the kind of deprivation at issue” such that “the State cannot 10 be required constitutionally to do the impossible by providing deprivation process,” 11 can the government avoid providing pre-deprivation process. Id.

12 Because, in this case, the provision of a bond hearing is both possible and 13 essential to preventing an erroneous deprivation of liberty, ICE is required to 14 provide Petitioner the opportunity for an individualized bond determination before 15 a neutral decisionmaker. See Morrissey, 408 U.S. at 481-82; Haygood, 769 F.2d at 16 1355-56; Jones, 393 F.3d at 932; Zinermon, 494 U.S. at 985; see also Youngberg v.
17 Romeo, 457 U.S. 307, 321-24 (1982); Lynch v. Baxley, 744 F.2d 1452 (11th Cir.
18 1984) (holding that individuals awaiting involuntary civil commitment proceedings 19 may not constitutionally be held in jail pending the determination as to whether they 20 can ultimately be recommitted). Under Mathews, “the balance weighs heavily in 21 favor of [Petitioner’s] liberty” and requires a deprivation hearing before a neutral 22 adjudicator.
23

24 i. Petitioner’s Private Interest in His Liberty is 25 Profound

26 The private interest at stake, freedom from physical restraint, is “at the core 27 of the liberty protected by the Due Process Clause.” Foucha v. Louisiana, 504 U.S.
28

1 71, 80 (1992); see also Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678, 690 (2001) (“Freedom 2 from imprisonment—from government custody, detention, or other forms of 3 physical restraint—lies at the heart of the liberty that [the Due Process] Clause 4 protects.”).

5 Petitioner entered the United States without inspection on 2009 and has lived 6 continuously in the U.S for more than sixteen years. During this time, he has 7 worked, supported his family, and formed enduring ties in his community.
8 He was apprehended more than two sixteen years after entry, not at the threshold of 9 the border.

10 As the Supreme Court recognized in Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 11 482–83 (1972), even conditional liberty carries profound constitutional 12 significance. A person who is free in the community “can be gainfully employed 13 and is free to be with family and friends and to form the other enduring attachments 14 of normal life.” Id. The Court further noted that terminating such liberty “inflicts a 15 grievous loss on the parolee and often others,” and emphasized that “[b]y whatever 16 name, the liberty is valuable and must be seen within the protection of the [Fifth] 17 Amendment.” Id.

18 So too here. Petitioner’s long-standing residence, family responsibilities, and 19 deep community ties reflect a profound liberty interest that cannot lawfully be 20 extinguished through misclassification as an “applicant for admission” under § 21 1225(b)(2). By detaining him without any opportunity for an individualized custody 22 determination, Respondents have arbitrarily deprived him of the very liberty the 23 Constitution protects..
24

25
26 ii. The Government’s Interest in Continued
27 Incarceration of Petitioner is Low and the Burden
28 on the Government to Refrain from Releasing Him
is Minimal

1 The government's interest in maintaining mandatory detention and without 2 allowing a bond hearing hearing is low, and when weighed against Petitioner's 3 significant private interest in his liberty, the scale tips sharply in favor of enjoining 4 Respondents from keeping him in unlawful custody. It becomes abundantly clear 5 that the Mathews test favors Petitioner when the Court considers that the process he 6 seeks—a bond proceeding to which he is entitled to—is a standard course of action 7 for the government. Providing Petitioner with a bond hearing before this Court (or 8 a neutral decisionmaker) to determine whether there is clear and convincing 9 evidence that Petitioner is a flight risk or danger to the community would impose 10 only a de minimis burden on the government, because the government routinely 11 provides this sort of hearing to individuals like Petitioner. Continuing to detain him 12 under § 235(b)(2), despite his eligibility for a bond hearing under § 236(a), is 13 unlawful.

14 As immigration detention is civil, it can have no punitive purpose. The 15 government's only interest in holding an individual in immigration detention can 16 be to prevent danger to the community or to ensure a noncitizen's appearance at 17 immigration proceedings. See Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 690. In this case, the 18 government cannot plausibly assert that it has any basis for detaining Petitioner 19 under the mandatory detention provisions of § 235(b)(2), because he entered the 20 United States more than sixteen years ago and was apprehended in the interior, not 21 at the border. He properly falls under § 236(a), which authorizes a bond hearing 22 The government's interest in detaining Petitioner at this time is extremely low.
23 Moreover, the "fiscal and administrative burdens" that his immediate release is 24 nonexistent in this case. See Mathews, 424 U.S. at 334-35. Petitioner does not seek 25 a unique or expensive form of process, but rather release from unlawful detention, 26 where removal is not reasonably foreseeable.
27
28

1 As the Ninth Circuit noted in 2017, which remains true today, “[t]he costs to 2 the public of immigration detention are ‘staggering’: $158 each day per detainee, 3 amounting to a total daily cost of $6.5 million.” Hernandez, 872 F.3d at 996.

4 Releasing Petitioner from unlawful custody and enjoining Petitioner’s 5 continued detention is far less costly and burdensome for the government than 6 keeping him detained. Hernandez, 872 F.3d at 996.

7 Due process also requires consideration of alternatives to detention at any 8 custody redetermination hearing that may occur. The primary purpose of 9 immigration detention is to ensure a noncitizen’s appearance during removal 10 proceedings. Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 697. Detention is not reasonably related to this 11 purpose if there are alternatives to detention that could mitigate risk of flight. See 12 Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 538 (1979). Accordingly, alternatives to detention 13 must be considered in determining whether Petitioner’s continued incarceration is 14 warranted.

15 As the above-cited authorities show, Petitioner is likely to succeed on his 16 claim that the current detention is unlawful. And, at the very minimum, he clearly 17 raises serious questions regarding this issue, thus also meriting a TRO. See 18 Alliance for the Wild Rockies, 632 F.3d at 1135.

20 2. Petitioner Will Suffer Irreparable Harm Absent 21 Injunctive Relief

22 Petitioner will suffer irreparable harm were he to remain detained after being 23 deprived of his liberty and subjected to unlawful incarceration by immigration 24 authorities without being provided the constitutionally adequate process that this 25 motion for a temporary restraining order seeks. Detainees in ICE custody are held 26 in “prison-like conditions.” Preap v. Johnson, 831 F.3d 1193, 1195 (9th Cir. 2016).
27 As the Supreme Court has explained, “[t]he time spent in jail awaiting trial has a 28 detrimental impact on the individual. It often means loss of a job; it disrupts family

1 life; and it enforces idleness.” Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 532-33 (1972); 2 accord Nat’l Ctr. for Immigrants Rights, Inc. v. I.N.S., 743 F.2d 1365, 1369 (9th 3 Cir. 1984). Moreover, the Ninth Circuit has recognized in “concrete terms the 4 irreparable harms imposed on anyone subject to immigration detention” including 5 “subpar medical and psychiatric care in ICE detention facilities, the economic 6 burdens imposed on detainees and their families as a result of detention, and the 7 collateral harms to children of detainees whose parents are detained.” Hernandez, 8 872 F.3d at 995. The government itself has documented alarmingly poor conditions 9 in ICE detention centers. See, e.g., DHS, Office of Inspector General (OIG), 10 Summary of Unannounced Inspections of ICE Facilities Conducted in Fiscal Years 11 2020-2023 (2024) (reporting violations of environmental health and safety 12 standards; staffing shortages affecting the level of care detainees received for 13 suicide watch, and detainees being held in administrative segregation in 14 unauthorized restraints, without being allowed time outside their cell, and with no 15 documentation that they were provided health care or three meals a day).¹

16
17 As detailed supra, Petitioner contends that his continued detention violates 18 his due process rights under the Constitution. It is clear that “the deprivation of 19 constitutional rights ‘unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury.’” Melendres v.
20 Arpaio, 695 F.3d 990, 1002 (9th Cir. 2012) (quoting Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 21 373 (1976)). Thus, a temporary restraining order is necessary to prevent Petitioner 22 from suffering irreparable harm by being subject to unlawful and unjust detention.

23 3. The Balance of Equities and the Public Interest Favor 24 Granting the Temporary Restraining Order

25 The balance of equities and the public interest undoubtedly favor granting 26 this temporary restraining order.

(last accessed Feb. 6, 2024).

1 First, the balance of hardships strongly favors Petitioner. The government 2 cannot suffer harm from an injunction that prevents it from engaging in an unlawful 3 practice. See Zepeda v. I.N.S., 753 F.2d 719, 727 (9th Cir. 1983) (“[T]he INS cannot 4 reasonably assert that it is harmed in any legally cognizable sense by being enjoined 5 from constitutional violations.”). Therefore, the government cannot allege harm 6 arising from a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction ordering it to 7 comply with the Constitution.

8 Further, any burden imposed by requiring the ICE to release Petitioner from 9 unlawful custody is both de minimis and clearly outweighed by the substantial harm 10 he will suffer as if he is detained. See Lopez v. Heckler, 713 F.2d 1432, 1437 (9th 11 Cir. 1983) (“Society’s interest lies on the side of affording fair procedures to all 12 persons, even though the expenditure of governmental funds is required.”).

13 A temporary restraining order is in the public interest. First and most 14 importantly, “it would not be equitable or in the public’s interest to allow [a party] 15 . . . to violate the requirements of federal law, especially when there are no adequate 16 remedies available.” Ariz. Dream Act Coal. v. Brewer, 757 F.3d 1053, 1069 (9th 17 Cir. 2014) (quoting Valle del Sol Inc. v. Whiting, 732 F.3d 1006, 1029 (9th Cir.
18 2013)). If a temporary restraining order is not entered, the government would 19 effectively be granted permission to detain Petitioner in violation of the 20 requirements of Due Process. “The public interest and the balance of the equities 21 favor ‘prevent[ing] the violation of a party’s constitutional rights.’” Ariz. Dream 22 Act Coal., 757 F.3d at 1069 (quoting Melendres, 695 F.3d at 1002); see also 23 Hernandez, 872 F.3d at 996 (“The public interest benefits from an injunction that 24 ensures that individuals are not deprived of their liberty and held in immigration 25 detention because of bonds established by a likely unconstitutional process.”); cf.
26 Preminger v. Principi, 422 F.3d 815, 826 (9th Cir. 2005) (“Generally, public 27
28

1 interest concerns are implicated when a constitutional right has been violated, 2 because all citizens have a stake in upholding the Constitution.”).

3 Therefore, the public interest overwhelmingly favors entering a temporary 4 restraining order and preliminary injunction.

5
6 Federal Courts have rejected DHS’s position.

7 Recent federal court decisions confirm that Respondents’ reliance on § 8 1225(b)(2) to detain Petitioner without a bond hearing is unlawful. In Cuevas 9 Guzman v. Andrews, 2025 WL 2617256, at *3 n.4 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 9, 2025), the 10 district court expressly distinguished Matter of Yajure Hurtado, it rejected its 11 sweeping application of § 1225(b)(2) and held that noncitizens apprehended in the 12 interior after long residence in the United States are properly detained under § 13 236(a), not § 1225(b)(2). Cuevas Guzman reaffirmed the longstanding rule that 14 entry without inspection does not permanently bar a person from eligibility for bond 15 once they are living in the country. That holding directly applies here.

16
17 Similarly, in Zaragoza Mosqueda v. Noem, 2025 WL 2591530, at *7 (C.D.
18 Cal. Sept. 8, 2025), the court recognized that the BIA’s interpretation in Yajure 19 forecloses administrative relief, rendering exhaustion futile. The same is true for 20 Petitioner, who cannot meaningfully seek bond redetermination before EOIR given 21 that the IJ held that he had no jurisdiction.

22 Finally, in Rodriguez Vazquez v. Bostock, 779 F. Supp. 3d 1239 (W.D. Wash.
23 2025), the district court issued a preliminary injunction requiring ICE to provide a 24 bond hearing to a petitioner detained under § 1225(b)(2), holding that custody in 25 such circumstances falls under § 1226(a). That decision confirms that habeas relief 26 is the proper vehicle and that this Court has the authority to order the same remedy 27 for Petitioner.
28

1 These cases establish that DHS's reliance on § 1225(b)(2) for long-term 2 residents like Petitioner is inconsistent with statutory text, contrary to constitutional 3 protections, and already rejected by multiple courts within this Circuit.

4 In Singh v. Lewis, No. 4:25-cv-96 (W.D. Ky. Sept. 22, 2025), the district
5 court granted a habeas petition and ordered release, finding that DHS's 6 reclassification of interior arrests under § 1225(b)(2) violated both the INA and due 7 process. The court rejected the government's reliance on Matter of Yajure Hurtado, 8 concluding that "an individual is not 'seeking admission' when he never attempted 9 to do so," and held that detention must proceed under § 1226(a). The court further 10 found that the automatic-stay regulation at 8 C.F.R. § 1003.19(i)(2) unlawfully 11 deprived the petitioner of liberty without due process and ordered her immediate 12 release upon posting bond.

13 Similarly, in Beltrán Barrera v. Tindall, No. 3:25-cv-541 (W.D. Ky. Sept.
14 19, 2025), the court held that DHS's blanket application of § 1225(b)(2) to 15 individuals apprehended years after entering the United States was contrary to the 16 statutory text and structure of the INA. The court emphasized that Congress 17 intended § 1225 to govern only applicants for admission encountered at the border, 18 and it therefore ordered the petitioner's release under § 1226(a)

19 Finally, in Benítez-Cornejo v. Cantu, No. CV-25-03672-PHX-JJT (ESW) (D.
20 Ariz. 2025), the District of Arizona granted habeas relief on the same statutory 21 question presented here, holding that individuals arrested in Arizona after years of 22 residence fall under § 1226(a) and must receive individualized bond hearings. The 23 court rejected DHS's reliance on Yajure Hurtado as inconsistent with the Ninth 24 Circuit's due-process jurisprudence and the statutory framework of the INA

25
26 Aside from the Ninth Circuit, numerous district courts have disagreed with 27 the BIA's analysis in Matter of Yajure Hurtado and granted habeas relief to 28

1 petitioners similarly situated to Petitioner, recognizing that custody in such cases 2 properly falls under § 236(a).

6 2025).

7
8 Because multiple courts have already recognized the unlawfulness of DHS's 9 reliance on § 1225(b)(2) to deny bond hearings. Petitioner's claim for relief thus 10 aligns with an established and growing consensus.

11 IV. CONCLUSION

12 For all the above reasons, this Court should find that Petitioner warrants a 13 temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction ordering that Respondents 14 (1) release him from his unlawful custody; and (2) refrain from sending him to any 15 place outside of the United States.
