

On December 19, 2025, the Central District of California issued a classwide injunction which has the effect of enjoining the Government from continuing to detaining Mr. Quinteros without the opportunity for bond. Lazaro Maldonado Bautista v. Ernesto Santacruz Jr, 5:25-cv-01873, C.D. Cal. 2025). certification. The bond eligible class is defined by that court as

All noncitizens in the United States without lawful status who (1) have entered or will enter the United States without inspection; (2) were not or will not be apprehended upon arrival; and (3) are not or will not be subject to detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c), § 1225(b)(1), or § 1231 at the time the Department of Homeland Security makes an initial custody determination.

An important point in this case is that Mr. Quinteros was already out on bond, having been granted bond in 2016!. However, the Government now argues that the Immigration Judge lacked jurisdiction to grant the bond and has chosen to detain Mr. Quinteros. The significance of Bautista's class wide injunction to this case is that it validates the Immigration Judge's authority to grant bond to Mr. Quinteros.

RESPONSE TO GOVERNMENT

The Government argues that because Mr. Quinteros entered the U.S. without authorization, he is subject to mandatory detention.

The Government's answer to Mr. Quinteros' petition does not dispute the history of the immigration statute as it pertains to the jurisdiction of the Immigration Judge to grant bonds. What has changed is the Government's interpretation of the statute, with a radical interpretation now put forth by the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA). Matter of Yajure Hurtado, 29 I&N Dec. 216 (BIA 2025).

Prior to September 1996, there were two different proceedings under the 1952 Immigration and Nationality Act: exclusion proceedings under then § 236 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 USC §1226), and deportation proceedings under then §242 (8 USC § 1252). The immigration judge (at the time called “special inquiry officers”) could grant bond to noncitizens in deportation proceedings under § 242(a) of the Act, but not in exclusion proceedings. § 235(b) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1225.

In September 1996, the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigration Responsibility Act combined both immigration court proceedings into what is now Removal Proceedings under § 240 of the Act, 8 USC § 1229a. Even though proceedings were combined, the Act preserved the distinction between what were formerly called excludable persons (now called “arriving aliens”), and those noncitizens present in the U.S. but found to be deportable.

Among the differences between the two classes is that arriving aliens are subject to mandatory detention under § 235(b)(2) of the Act, 8 USC § 1225(b)(2). The law has always been interpreted to grant the immigration judge jurisdiction to release deportable noncitizens on bond. § 236 of the Act, 8 USC § 1225(b)(1)(2). In other words, mandatory detention under § 235(b)(2) applies only to “arriving aliens” and applicants for admission.

The Supreme Court recently analyzed the interplay between §§ 1225 and 1226 in Jennings v. Rodriguez, supra. According to the Supreme Court, “an alien who arrived in the United States or is present in this country but has not been admitted, is treated as an applicant for admission.” Jennings, 583 U.S. at 287 (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(1)). The Supreme Court then states that § 1226 “applies to aliens already present in the United States.” Id. at 303. “Section 1226(a) creates a default rule for those aliens by permitting – but not requiring – the Attorney General to issue warrants for their arrest and detention pending removal proceedings. Section 1226(a) also permits the Attorney General to release those aliens on bond, ‘except as provided in subsection (c) of this section.’” Id. at 303. Subsection (c) of Section 1226 pertains to terrorists and those who commit certain criminal offenses.

Jennings adopts the long held difference between the detention of arriving aliens under § 1225 and the detention of noncitizens who are already present in the U.S. § 1226. This understanding was affirmed by the BIA itself as recently as June 30, 2025. Matter of Akhmedov, 29 I&N Dec. 166 (BIA 2025), which stated that a noncitizen present in the U.S. without inspection or admission was in custody pursuant to § 236(a), not § 235.

In Yajure Hurtado, supra, issued by the Board of Immigration Appeals on September 5, 2025, the BIA essentially eliminates § 236 of the Act, 8 USC § 1226. The decision is a precedent decision, meaning it is a published decision binding on all immigration judges and all ICE personnel. Yajure Hurtado found that any noncitizen who is present in the United States without having been inspected and admitted is subject to detention under INA § 235(b)(2), not INA § 236(a).

COURT’S AUTHORITY TO ORDER BOND HEARINGS

This Court, in habeas proceedings, has the authority to order a bond hearing. “[C]ommon-law habeas corpus was, above all, an adaptable remedy. Its precise application and scope changed depending upon the circumstances. See 3 Blackstone (describing habeas as “the great and efficacious writ, in all manner of illegal confinement”); see also Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 319, 115 S.Ct. 851, 130 L.Ed.2d 808 (1995) (Habeas “is, at its core, an equitable remedy”); Jones v. Cunningham, 371 U.S. 236, 243, 83 S.Ct. 373, 9 L.Ed.2d 285 (1963) (Habeas is not “a static, narrow, formalistic remedy; its scope has grown to achieve its grand purpose”).” Boumediene v. Bush, 553 U.S. 723, 779–80 (2008). Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 542 U.S. 507, 526 (2004) (discussing “the flexibility of the habeas mechanism”).

A constitutionally adequate habeas court “must have the power to order the conditional release of an individual unlawfully detained—though release need not be the exclusive remedy and is not the appropriate one in every case in which the writ is granted.” Boumediene, supra, 779.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Quinteros therefore respectfully asks this Court to order Mr. Quinteros’s immediate release pursuant to the bond he already posted, in accordance with the injunction in Bautista v. Santacruz Jr., supra.
