LEGAL ARGUMENT	11
I. Petitioner Warrants A Temporary Restraining Order	12
a. Petitioner is likely to succeed in the merits because Petitioner’s detention violates substantive due process.	12
b. Petitioner is likely to succeed on the merits of his claim that the Constitution requires a hearing before a neutral arbiter prior to any re-incarceration by ICE.	14
1. Petitioner has a protected liberty interest in his conditional release.	16
2. Petitioner’s liberty interest mandates his release from unlawful custody and a hearing before any re-arrest.	18
(a) Petitioner’s private interest in his liberty is profound.	20
(b) The government’s interest in re-incarcerating Petitioner without a hearing is low and the burden on the government to refrain from re-arresting him until he is provided a hearing is minimal.	21
(c) Without a due process hearing prior to any re-arrest, the risk of erroneous deprivation of liberty is high.	23
II. Petitioner Will Suffer Irreparable Harm Absent Injunctive Relief	24
III. The Balance of Equities and the Public Interest Favor Granting this Temporary Restraining Order	26

NOTICE OF MOTION

Petitioner D.L.C. applies to this Honorable Court for a temporary restraining order enjoining Respondents Department of Homeland Security (DHS), U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), and Pam Bondi, in her official capacity as the U.S. Attorney General, (1) from continuing to detain him based on an unlawful action by ICE, (2) ordering his immediate release from immigration detention; and (3) from re-arresting D.L.C. until he is afforded a hearing before a neutral decisionmaker, as required by the Due Process clause of the Fifth Amendment, to determine whether circumstances have materially changed such that his re-incarceration would be justified because there is clear and convincing evidence establishing that he is a danger to the community or a flight risk.

If the Court deems oral argument necessary, Petitioner requests to appear by video.

Respectfully submitted this December 23, 2025.

By counsel,

/s/ Natalia Vieira Santanna

INTRODUCTION

Petitioner, D.L.C., has been civilly imprisoned by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) at Mesa Verde ICE Processing Center (“Mesa Verde”) since September 17, 2025, after having complied with the conditions of his release from the custody of the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) since he was granted parole on May 12, 2022. For years, D.L.C. has appeared at appointments, taken photographs, and answered supervision calls from the Intensive Supervision Appearance Program (ISAP), while diligently pursuing asylum before the Executive Office of Immigration Review (EOIR). Throughout this time, D.L.C. has worked with DHS authorization to provide for his partner, and her daughter whom he treats as his own.

D.L.C.’s current detention may be permitted under the Constitution and Immigration and Nationality Act (INA) only if Respondents can demonstrate before a neutral decision-maker that he is a flight risk or danger to the community, or if his removal is imminent. As a hardworking partner and community member with no criminal history, D.L.C. is not a flight risk or danger. Thus, D.L.C.’s continued detention without a bond hearing before a neutral decision-maker violates his rights under the INA and the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. U.S. Const. amend. V.

As a result of his arrest and detention, D.L.C. is suffering irreparable and ongoing harm. The unconstitutional deprivation of “physical liberty” unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury.” Hernandez v. Sessions, 872 F.3d 976, 994-95 (9th Cir. 2017). Indeed, “[f]reedom from imprisonment—from government custody, detention, or other forms of physical restraint—lies at the heart of the liberty that [the Due Process] Clause protects.” Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678, 690 (2001).

In light of this irreparable harm, and because he is likely to succeed on the merits of his due process claims, D.L.C. respectfully requests that this Court issue an ex parte temporary restraining order (“TRO”) immediately releasing him from custody and enjoining the government from re-arresting him absent the opportunity to contest that arrest at a hearing before a neutral decision maker. Confronted with substantially identical facts and legal issues, this and other

1 courts in this circuit have recently granted the exact relief Petitioner seeks. See J.O.L.R. v
 2 Wofford, 2025 WL 2718631 * 11 (E.D. Cal Sept. 23, 2025); R.D.T.M. v Wofford, 2025 WL

 6 (granting preliminary injunction).

7 To maintain this Court’s jurisdiction, the Court should also prohibit the government from 8 transferring D.L.C. out of this District and removing him from the country until these proceedings 9 have concluded.

10 STATEMENT OF FACTS AND CASE

11 Since mid-May 2025, DHS has initiated an aggressive new enforcement campaign 12 targeting people who are in regular removal proceedings in immigration court, many of whom 13 have pending applications for asylum or other relief. This “coordinated operation” is “aimed at 14 dramatically accelerating deportations” by arresting people at the courthouse or at the ICE office 15 and placing them into expedited removal. Arelis R. Hernández & Maria Sacchetti, Immigrant
 16 Arrests at Courthouses Signal New Tactic in Trump’s Deportation Push, Wash. Post, May 23,
 17 2025, https://www.washingtonpost.com/immigration/2025/05/23/immigration-court-arrests-ice-
 18 trump/; see also Hamed Aleaziz, Luis Ferré-Sadurní, & Miriam Jordan, How ICE is Seeking to 19 Ramp Up Deportations Through Courthouse Arrests, N.Y. Times, May 30, 2025,
 20 <https://www.nytimes.com/2025/05/30/us/politics/ice-courthouse-arrests.html>. The Trump 21 administration implemented a policy to drastically increase immigration arrests to a target of at 22 least 3,000 per day. According to White House officials like Stephen Miller, this directive
 23 prioritized arrest numbers over the individuals’ criminal history, encouraging agents to conduct 24 mass round-ups in public spaces rather than targeted investigations.

25 As a result, arrests of non-citizens with no criminal record surged by over 800%, and two-
 26 thirds of those deported had no criminal history. This focus on quantity over public safety led to a
 27 new and aggressive tactic: systematically arresting immigrants at courthouses and ICE
 28

1 appointments, regardless of the status of their legal cases. This has created a climate of fear,
2 discouraging people from attending their mandatory hearings or ICE appointments.

3 In addition, individuals are now held for extended periods, sometimes days, in temporary 4 holding cells that are not designed for overnight or prolonged detention, often under inhumane
5 conditions. Government officials have justified these harsh conditions not as a matter of 6 necessity, but as an intentional deterrent, which is not a constitutionally permissible reason for 7 detention.

8 The government's new campaign is also a significant shift from the previous DHS 9 practice of re-detaining noncitizens only after a material change in circumstances. See Saravia v.
10 Sessions, 280 F. Supp. 3d 1168, 1197 (N.D. Cal. 2017), aff'd sub nom. Saravia for A.H. v.

12 This is the first opportunity D.L.C. can bring this action because there is a scarcity of 13 qualified federal and immigration attorneys in this jurisdiction, and the demand for 14 competent lawyers far exceeds availability. Based on these current circumstances, D.L.C.'s
15 inability to rapidly submit this Habeas Corpus and Temporary Restraining Order (TRO),
16 shall not automatically prevent this court in granting a TRO for his immediate release.

17 D.L.C. fled Peru in 2022 because of persecution he suffered by the government of Peru.

22 risk and releasing him pursuant to 8 C.F.R. § 212.5; see also D.L.C. Aff. ¶ 3.

23 Upon his release, D.L.C. established a life with his partner in Bakersfield, California. ¶ 6
24 Id. DHS granted him employment authorization, enabling him to provide for his partner and her 25 daughter whom he treats as his own. ¶ 6 Id. Prior to detention, D.L.C. worked diligently to 26 provide for his family. ¶ 6 Id. D.L.C. has never committed any crimes, nor been arrested for any 27 reason. ¶ 7 Id.

1 D.L.C. diligently complied with all requirements imposed by DHS through the Intensive
2 Supervision Appearance Program (ISAP). ¶ 4 Id. Initially, he attended an in-person appointment
3 in Bakersfield, where he presented his documents and signed paperwork to enroll in the program.
4 ¶ 3 Id. He was transitioned to a different Intensive Supervision Appearance Program (ISAP),
5 which required the installation of a monitoring application on a cell phone for weekly reporting
6 every Wednesday by 12pm. ¶ 3 Id. The program required D.L.C. to take a photo every week,
7 answer phone calls from ISAP officers, and report periodically in-person at ISAP and ICE
8 offices. ¶ 3 Id. D.L.C. complied with the requirements of the ISAP program and his ICE's order
9 of supervision. ¶ 4 Id. D.L.C. was never informed of any violations or issues with his reporting. ¶
10 4 Id.

11 On September 17, 2025, at 8 a.m., ICE officers appeared unannounced outside his home
12 in Bakersfield. ¶ 8 Id. There were two vehicles with officers waiting outside his home. ¶ 8 Id. The 13 officers approached him, asked for his identification, and told him that he had to go with them to 14 the ICE office in Bakersfield. ¶ 8 Id. When he asked why, he was not given an explanation and 15 was told that he would be released later that day. ¶ 8 Id. Out of fear, he complied. ¶ 8 Id. ICE
16 officers drove D.L.C. for approximately fifteen minutes to the ICE office in Bakersfield. ¶ 8 Id.
17 Upon arrival at the ICE office in Bakersfield, he was taken directly to the basement, where 18 officers informed him that he was under arrest. ¶ 9 Id. They placed him in handcuffs and chains
19 around his waist and ankles. ¶ 9 Id. When he asked why he was being arrested, officers initially 20 refused to explain. ¶ 9 Id. After repeatedly asking, another officer told him that they had been 21 outside D.L.C.'s home looking for someone else and had detained him instead, stating that D.L.C.
22 had been at the wrong place at the wrong time. ¶ 9 Id. D.L.C. was held in a small holding cell
23 until approximately 6:00 p.m., given minimal food, and was very cold. ¶ 9 Id. Later that day, he 24 was moved to another cell inside the ICE office with two other people. ¶ 9 Id. At approximately 25 6:00 p.m., he was transported to the Mesa Verde Detention Facility, approximately four minutes
26 from the ICE office in Bakersfield. ¶ 10 Id. D.L.C. was placed in a holding cell with three other 27 people. ¶ 10 Id. Again, he was fed minimally. ¶ 10 Id. He was very cold and unable to lay down.
28

¶ 10 Id. D.L.C. was finally released into the dormitories at approximately 11:00 p.m. that night. ¶ 10 Id.

While detained at Mesa Verde, D.L.C., is unable to work and provide for his partner and her daughter, whom he treats as his own. ¶ 6 Id. Since his detention, D.L.C. has developed a cold from the unsanitary conditions inside the facility. ¶ 11 Id. He is also experiencing extreme stress, anxiety and is constantly overthinking about what may happen if he is returned to Peru. ¶ 11 Id.

On September 12, 2025, D.L.C. appeared for his Credible Fear Interview. ¶ 12 Id. The same day, he received a Notice to Appear with a scheduled hearing date of December 10, 2025. ¶ 12 Id. Currently, his next hearing is scheduled for January 15, 2026. See Automatic Case Information for D.L.C., attached as Exh. 3.

LEGAL ARGUMENT

D.L.C. is entitled to a temporary restraining order if he establishes that he is “likely to succeed on the merits, . . . likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in [his] favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest.” Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008); Stuhlbarg Int’l Sales Co. v. John D. Brush & Co., 240 F.3d 832, 839 n.7 (9th Cir. 2001) (noting that preliminary injunction and temporary restraining order standards are “substantially identical”). Even if D.L.C. does not show a likelihood of success on the merits, the Court may still grant a temporary restraining order if he raises “serious questions” as to the merits of his claims, the balance of hardships tips “sharply” in his favor, and the remaining equitable factors are satisfied. Alliance for the Wild Rockies v. Cottrell, 632 F.3d 1127 (9th Cir. 2011). As set forth in more detail below, D.L.C. overwhelmingly satisfies both standards.

Furthermore, the requirements for issuing a temporary restraining order without notice are met here. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b). D.L.C. notified respondents’ counsel on December 23, 2025 that he would be filing the motion by email to the U.S. Attorney’s Office email address for habeas petition filings. D.L.C. also set out specific facts demonstrating that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage may result before respondents can be heard in opposition. See Pinchi v.

5 I. Petitioner Warrants A Temporary Restraining Order

6 A temporary restraining order should be issued if “immediate and irreparable injury, loss,
 7 or irreversible damage will result” to the applicant in the absence of an order. Fed. R. Civ. P.
 8 65(b). The purpose of a temporary restraining order is to prevent irreparable harm before a 9 preliminary injunction hearing is held. See Granny Goose Foods, Inc. v. Bhd. Of Teamsters &
 10 Auto Truck Drivers Local No. 70 of Alameda City, 415 U.S. 423, 439 (1974). D.L.C. is likely to 11 remain in unlawful custody in violation of his due process rights without intervention by this 12 Court. D.L.C. will continue to suffer irreparable injury if he continues to be detained without due 13 process.

14 a. Petitioner is likely to succeed in the merits because Petitioner’s detention 15 violates substantive due process.

16 The Due Process Clause applies to “all ‘persons’ within the United States, including 17 [noncitizens], whether their presence here is lawful, unlawful, temporary, or permanent.”
 18 Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 693. “The touchstone of due process is protection of the individual against 19 arbitrary action of government,” Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 558 (1974), including “the 20 exercise of power without any reasonable justification in the service of a legitimate government 21 objective,” Cnty. of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 846 (1998). “Freedom from 22 imprisonment—from government custody, detention, or other forms of physical restraint—lies at 23 the heart of the liberty that Clause protects.” Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 690.

24 To comply with substantive due process, the government’s deprivation of an individual’s
 25 liberty must be justified by a sufficient purpose. Therefore, immigration detention, which is 26 “civil, not criminal,” and “nonpunitive in purpose and effect,” must be justified by either
 27 (1) dangerousness or (2) flight risk. Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 690; see Hernandez, 872 F.3d at 994
 28 (“[T]he government has no legitimate interest in detaining individuals who have been determined

1 not to be a danger to the community and whose appearance at future immigration proceedings can
2 be reasonably ensured by a lesser bond or alternative conditions.”). When these rationales are 3 absent, immigration detention serves no legitimate government purpose and becomes 4 impermissibly punitive, violating a person’s substantive due process rights. See Jackson v.
5 Indiana, 406 U.S. 715, 738 (1972) (detention must have a “reasonable relation” to the 6 government’s interests in preventing flight and danger); see also Mahdawi v. Trump, No. 2:25-7 CV-389, 2025 WL 1243135, at *11 (D. Vt. Apr. 30, 2025) (ordering release from custody after 8 finding petitioner may “succeed on his Fifth Amendment claim if he demonstrates either that the 9 government acted with a punitive purpose or that it lacks any legitimate reason to detain him”).

10 The Supreme Court has recognized that noncitizens may bring as-applied challenges to 11 detention, including so-called “mandatory” detention. Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510, 532-33 12 (2003) (Kennedy, J., concurring) (“Were there to be an unreasonable delay by the INS in 13 pursuing and completing deportation proceedings, it could become necessary then to inquire 14 whether the detention is not to facilitate deportation, or to protect against risk of flight or 15 dangerousness, but to incarcerate for other reasons.”); Nielsen v. Preap, 586 U.S. 392, 420 (2019)
16 (“Our decision today on the meaning of [§ 1226(c)] does not foreclose as-applied challenges—17 that is, constitutional challenges to applications of the statute as we have now read it.”).

18 D.L.C., who has no criminal record and who is diligently pursuing his immigration case,
19 is neither a danger nor a flight risk. Therefore, his detention is both punitive and not justified by a 20 legitimate purpose, violating his substantive due process rights. Indeed, when Respondents chose 21 to release D.L.C. from custody in May 2022, that decision represented their finding that he was 22 neither a danger nor a flight risk. See Saravia at 1176 (N.D. Cal. 2017), aff’d sub nom. Saravia
23 for A.H. v. Sessions, 905 F.3d 1137 (9th Cir. 2018) (“Release reflects a determination by the 24 government that the noncitizen is not a danger to the community or a flight risk.”). No material 25 changes in circumstances have transpired since to disturb that finding.

26 First, because D.L.C. had no criminal history, and has had no intervening criminal history
27 or arrests since his release, there is no credible argument that he is a danger to the community.
28

1 Second, as to flight risk, the question is whether custody is reasonably necessary to secure
2 a person's appearance at immigration court hearings and related check-ins. See Hernandez, 872
3 F.3d at 990-91. There is no basis to argue that D.L.C., who was arrested by Respondents despite
4 appearing at his scheduled ICE appointments and complying with reporting, is a flight risk.
5 Moreover, D.L.C. has a viable path toward immigration relief, further mitigating any risk of 6 flight. See Padilla v. U.S. Immigr. and Customs Enf't, 704 F. Supp. 3d 1163, 1173 (W.D. Wash.
7 2023) (holding that there is not a legitimate concern of flight risk where plaintiffs have bona fide
8 asylum claims and desire to remain in the United States). D.L.C. is not a flight risk, given that he 9 has promptly communicated with his officer, ICE, and ISAP appointment. At the time of his 10 arrest, D.L.C. had filed his Form I-589, Application for Asylum and Withholding of Removal, 11 and he has every intention of continuing to pursue his applications for immigration relief.

12 In sum, D.L.C.'s actions since Respondents first released him confirm that he is neither a 13 danger nor a flight risk. Indeed, his ongoing compliance and community ties compel the 14 conclusion that he is even less of a danger or flight risk than when he was initially released.
15 Accordingly, D.L.C.'s ongoing detention is unconstitutional, and substantive due process
16 principles require his immediate release.

17 b. Petitioner is likely to succeed on the merits of his claim that the 18 Constitution requires a hearing before a neutral arbiter prior to any re-
19 incarceration by ICE.

20 D.L.C. is likely to succeed on his claim that, in his particular circumstances, his current 21 detention is unlawful because the Due Process Clause of the Constitution prevents Respondents
22 from re-arresting him without first providing a pre-deprivation hearing before a neutral 23 adjudicator where the government demonstrates by clear and convincing evidence that there has 24 been a material change in circumstances such that he is now a danger or a flight risk.

25 The statute and regulations grant ICE the ability to unilaterally revoke any noncitizen's
26 release and re-arrest the noncitizen at any time. 8 U.S.C. § 1226(b); 8 C.F.R. § 236.1(c)(9).
27 Notwithstanding the breadth of the statutory language granting ICE the power to revoke an 28 immigration bond "at any time," 8 U.S.C. 1226(b), in Matter of Sugay, 17 I&N Dec. 647, 640

1 (BIA 1981), the BIA recognized an implicit limitation on ICE’s authority to re-arrest noncitizens.
2 There, the BIA held that “where a previous bond determination has been made by an immigration
3 judge, no change should be made by [the DHS] absent a change of circumstance.” Id. In practice, 4 DHS “requires a showing of changed circumstances both where the prior bond determination was 5 made by an immigration judge and where the previous release decision was made by a DHS 6 officer.” Saravia, 280 F. Supp. 3d at 1197 (N.D. Cal. 2017), aff’d sub nom. Saravia for A.H. v.
7 Sessions, 905 F.3d 1137 (9th Cir. 2018) (emphasis added). The Ninth Circuit has also assumed
8 that, under Matter of Sugay, ICE has no authority to re-detain an individual absent changed
9 circumstances. Panosyan v. Mayorkas, 854 F. App’x 787, 788 (9th Cir. 2021) (“Thus, absent
10 changed circumstances ... ICE cannot redetain Panosyan.”).

11 ICE has further limited its authority as described in Sugay, and “generally only re-arrests
12 [noncitizens] pursuant to § 1226(b) after a material change in circumstances.” Saravia, 280 F.
13 Supp. 3d at 1197 (N.D. Cal. 2017), aff’d sub nom. Saravia for A.H. v. Sessions, 905 F.3d 1137
14 (9th Cir. 2018) (quoting Defs.’ Second Supp. Br. at 1, Dkt. No. 90) (emphasis added). Thus, 15 under BIA case law and ICE practice, ICE may re-arrest a noncitizen who had been previously
16 released from custody only after a material change in circumstances. See Saravia, 280 F. Supp. 3d
17 at 1176; Matter of Sugay, 17 I&N Dec. at 640.

18 ICE’s power to re-arrest a noncitizen who is at liberty following a release from custody is 19 also constrained by the demands of due process. See Hernandez, 872 F.3d 976, 981 (9th Cir.
20 2017) (“the government’s discretion to incarcerate non-citizens is always constrained by the 21 requirements of due process”). In this case, the guidance provided by Matter of Sugay—that ICE 22 should not re-arrest a noncitizen absent changed circumstances—is insufficient to protect 23 D.L.C.’s weighty interest in his freedom from unlawful detention.

24 Federal district courts in California have repeatedly recognized that the demands of due 25 process and the limitations on DHS’s authority to revoke a noncitizen’s bond or parole set out in 26 DHS’s stated practice and Matter of Sugay both require a pre-deprivation hearing for a noncitizen
27 on ICE release, like D.L.C., before ICE re-detains him. See, e.g., Ortega v. Bonnar, 415 F. Supp.

Noem*, Slip Copy, 2025 WL 1853763 (N.D. Cal. July 4, 2025).

Courts analyze procedural due process claims, such as this one, in two steps: the first asks whether a protected liberty interest exists under the Due Process Clause, and the second examines the procedures necessary to ensure that any deprivation of that protected liberty interest accords with the Constitution. See Kentucky Dep't of Corrections v. Thompson, 490 U.S. 454, 460 (1989).

1. Petitioner has a protected liberty interest in his conditional release.

The Due Process Clause protects D.L.C.'s liberty from immigration custody: "Freedom from imprisonment—from government custody, detention, or other forms of physical restraint—lies at the heart of the liberty that [the Due Process] Clause protects." Zadvydas v. Davis, 533

1 U.S. 678, 690 (2001).

2 Since May 12, 2022, D.L.C. has exercised that freedom under DHS's own grant of 3 parole. Accordingly, he retains a weighty liberty interest under the Due Process Clause of the 4 Fifth Amendment in avoiding unlawful re-incarceration. See Young v. Harper, 520 U.S. 143, 146-
5 47 (1997); Gagnon v. Scarpelli, 411 U.S. 778, 781-82 (1973); Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 6 482-483 (1972).

7 In Morrissey, the Supreme Court examined the "nature of the interest" that a parolee has 8 in "his continued liberty." 408 U.S. at 481-82. The Court noted that, "subject to the conditions of 9 his parole, [a parolee] can be gainfully employed and is free to be with family and friends and to 10 form the other enduring attachments of normal life." Id. at 482. The Court further noted that "the 11 parolee has relied on at least an implicit promise that parole will be revoked only if he fails to live
12 up to the parole conditions." Id. The Court explained that "the liberty of a parolee, although 13 indeterminate, includes many of the core values of unqualified liberty and its termination inflicts
14 a grievous loss on the parolee and often others." Id. In turn, "[b]y whatever name, the liberty is 15 valuable and must be seen within the protection of the [Fifth] Amendment." Morrissey, 408 U.S.
16 at 482.

17 This basic principle—that individuals have a liberty interest in their conditional release—
18 has been reinforced by both the Supreme Court and the circuit courts on numerous occasions. See,
19 e.g., Young v. Harper, 520 U.S. at 152 (holding that individuals placed in a pre-parole program
20 created to reduce prison overcrowding have a protected liberty interest requiring pre-deprivation
21 process); Gagnon v. Scarpelli, 411 U.S. at 781-82 (holding that individuals released on felony
22 probation have a protected liberty interest requiring pre-deprivation process). As the First Circuit
23 has explained, when analyzing the issue of whether a specific conditional release rises to the level 24 of a protected liberty interest, "[c]ourts have resolved the issue by comparing the specific 25 conditional release in the case before them with the liberty interest in parole as characterized by 26 Morrissey." Gonzalez-Fuentes v. Molina, 607 F.3d 864, 887 (1st Cir. 2010) (internal quotation
27 marks and citation omitted). See also, e.g., Hurd v. District of Columbia, 864 F.3d 671, 683 (D.C.
28

1 Cir. 2017) (“a person who is in fact free of physical confinement—even if that freedom is 2 lawfully revocable—has a liberty interest that entitles him to constitutional due process before he
3 is re-incarcerated”) (citing Young, 520 U.S. at 152, Gagnon, 411 U.S. at 782, and Morrissey, 408
4 U.S. at 482).

5 In fact, it is well-established that an individual maintains a protectable liberty interest even 6 where the individual obtains liberty through a mistake of law or fact. See id.; Gonzalez-Fuentes,
7 607 F.3d at 887; Johnson v. Williford, 682 F.2d 868, 873 (9th Cir. 1982) (noting that due process 8 considerations support the notion that an inmate released on parole by mistake, because he was 9 serving a sentence that did not carry a possibility of parole, could not be re-incarcerated because 10 the mistaken release was not his fault, and he had appropriately adjusted to society, so it “would 11 be inconsistent with fundamental principles of liberty and justice” to return him to prison)
12 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

13 Here, when this Court “‘compar[es] the release in [D.L.C.’s case], with the liberty interest 14 in parole as characterized by Morrissey,” they bear similar features in liberty interests. See 15 Gonzalez-Fuentes, 607 F.3d at 887. Just as in Morrissey, D.L.C.’s release “enables him to do a 16 wide range of things open to persons,” including to live at home, work, care for his family, for 17 whom he is the financial provider, and “be with family and friends and to form the other enduring 18 attachments of normal life.” Morrissey, 408 U.S. at 482.

19 2. Petitioner’s liberty interest mandates his release from unlawful 20 custody and a hearing before any re-arrest.

21 D.L.C. asserts that, here, (1) where his detention would be civil; (2) where he has been at 22 liberty for over three years, during which time he has appeared at all of his immigration court
23 hearings and ICE appointments; (3) where he has a viable asylum claim (4) where no change in 24 circumstances exist that would justify his lawful detention; and (5) where the only circumstance
25 that has changed was ICE’s move to arrest as many people as possible under the new 26 administration’s initiative, due process mandates that he be released from his unlawful custody 27 and receive notice and a hearing before a neutral adjudicator before any re-arrest or revocation of 28 his custody release.

1 “Adequate, or due, process depends upon the nature of the interest affected. The more
2 important the interest and the greater the effect of its impairment, the greater the procedural
3 safeguards the [government] must provide to satisfy due process.” Haygood v. Younger, 769 F.2d
4 1350, 1355-56 (9th Cir. 1985) (en banc) (citing Morrissey, 408 U.S. at 481-82). This Court must 5 “balance [D.L.C.’s] liberty interest against the [government’s] interest in the efficient
6 administration of” its immigration laws to determine what process he is owed to ensure that ICE
7 does not unconstitutionally deprive him of his liberty. Id. at 1357. Under the test outlined in 8 Mathews v. Eldridge, this Court must consider three factors in conducting its balancing test:
9 “first, the private interest that will be affected by the official action; second, the risk of an 10 erroneous deprivation of such interest through the procedures used, and the probative value, if 11 any, of additional or substitute procedural safeguards; and finally the government’s interest, 12 including the function involved and the fiscal and administrative burdens that the additional or 13 substitute procedural requirements would entail.” Haygood, 769 F.2d at 1357 (citing Mathews v.
14 Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 335 (1976)).

15 The Supreme Court “usually has held that the Constitution requires some kind of a 16 hearing before the State deprives a person of liberty or property.” Zinerman v. Burch, 494 U.S.
17 113, 127 (1990) (emphasis in original). Only in a “special case” where post-deprivation remedies
18 are “the only remedies the State could be expected to provide” can the post-deprivation process
19 satisfy the requirements of due process. Zinerman, 494 U.S. at 985. Moreover, only where “one
20 of the variables in the Mathews equation—the value of predeprivation safeguards—is negligible
21 in preventing the kind of deprivation at issue” such that “the State cannot be required
22 constitutionally to do the impossible by providing predeprivation process,” can the government
23 avoid providing pre-deprivation process. Id.

24 Because, in this case, the provision of a pre-deprivation hearing is both possible and 25 valuable to preventing an erroneous deprivation of liberty, ICE is required to provide D.L.C. with 26 notice and a hearing prior to any reincarceration and revocation of his release. See Morrissey, 408
27 U.S. at 481-82; Haygood, 769 F.2d at 1355-56; Zinerman, 494 U.S. at 985; see also Youngberg v.
28

1 Romeo, 457 U.S. 307, 321-24 (1982); Lynch v. Baxley, 744 F.2d 1452 (11th Cir. 1984) (holding 2 that individuals awaiting involuntary civil commitment proceedings may not constitutionally be 3 held in jail pending the determination as to whether they can ultimately be recommitted). Under 4 Mathews, “the balance weighs heavily in favor of [D.L.C.’s] liberty” and requires a pre-
5 deprivation hearing before a neutral adjudicator.

6 (a) Petitioner’s private interest in his liberty is profound.

7 Under Morrissey and its progeny, individuals conditionally released from serving a 8 criminal sentence have a liberty interest that is “valuable.” Morrissey, 408 U.S. at 482. In 9 addition, the principles espoused in Hurd and Johnson—that a person who is in fact free of 10 physical confinement, even if that freedom is lawfully revocable, has a liberty interest that entitles 11 him to constitutional due process before he is re-incarcerated—apply with even greater force to 12 individuals like D.L.C., who have been released pending civil removal proceedings, rather than 13 parolees or probationers who are subject to incarceration as part of a sentence for a criminal 14 conviction. Parolees and probationers have a diminished liberty interest given their underlying 15 convictions. See, e.g., U.S. v. Knights, 534 U.S. 112, 119 (2001); Griffin v. Wisconsin, 483 U.S.
16 868, 874 (1987). Nonetheless, even in the context of criminal parolees, the courts have held that 17 they cannot be re-arrested without a due process hearing, during which they can raise any claims
18 they may have regarding why their reincarceration would be unlawful. See Gonzalez-Fuentes,
19 607 F.3d at 891-92; Hurd, 864 F.3d at 683. Thus, D.L.C. retains a truly weighty liberty interest 20 even though he is under conditional release.

21 What is at stake in this case for D.L.C. is one of the most profound individual interests
22 recognized by our legal system: whether ICE may unilaterally nullify a prior decision releasing a 23 non-citizen from custody and be able to take away his physical freedom, i.e., his “constitutionally 24 protected interest in avoiding physical restraint.” Singh v. Holder, 638 F.3d 1196, 1203 (9th Cir.
25 2011) (internal quotation omitted). “Freedom from bodily restraint has always been at the core of 26 the liberty protected by the Due Process Clause.” Foucha v. Louisiana, 504 U.S. 71, 80 (1992).
27 See also Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 690 (“Freedom from imprisonment—from government custody, detention, or other forms of physical restraint—lies at the heart of the liberty that [the Due Process] Clause protects.”); Cooper v. Oklahoma, 517 U.S. 348 (1996).
28

Thus, there is a clear, profound private interest at stake in this case, which must be weighed heavily when determining what process he is owed under the Constitution. See Mathews, 424 U.S. at 334-35.

(b) The government’s interest in re-incarcerating Petitioner without a hearing is low and the burden on the government to refrain from re-arresting him until he is provided a hearing is minimal.

The government’s interest in maintaining an unlawful detention without a due process hearing is low, and when weighed against D.L.C.’s significant private interest in his liberty, the scale tips sharply in favor of enjoining Respondents (1) from keeping him in unlawful custody; (2) re-arresting D.L.C. unless and until the government demonstrates to a neutral adjudicator by clear and convincing evidence that he is a flight risk or danger to the community; and (3) removing him from the United States in violation of an agency order and district court injunction. It becomes abundantly clear that the Mathews test favors D.L.C. when the Court considers that the process he seeks—notice and a hearing regarding whether release from custody should be revoked—is a standard course of action for the government. Providing D.L.C. with a hearing before this Court (or a neutral decisionmaker) to determine whether there is clear and convincing evidence that D.L.C. is a flight risk or danger to the community would impose only a de minimis burden on the government, because the government routinely provides this sort of hearing to individuals like D.L.C.

As immigration detention is civil in nature, it cannot serve a punitive purpose. The government’s only interest in holding an individual in immigration detention can be to prevent danger to the community or to ensure a noncitizen’s appearance at immigration proceedings. See Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 690. In this case, the government cannot plausibly assert that it has any basis for detaining D.L.C. when he was released after a DHS’ determination in May 2022, and since has lived at liberty with his community, without any criminal or civil traffic infractions.

In May 2022, DHS officers determined that D.L.C. was not a flight risk or a danger to the

1 community and there are no material changes in circumstances to undermine that determination.
2 See Morrissey, 408 U.S. at 482 (“It is not sophistic to attach greater importance to a person’s
3 justifiable reliance in maintaining his conditional freedom so long as he abides by the conditions
4 on his release, than to his mere anticipation or hope of freedom”) (quoting United States ex rel.
5 Bey v. Connecticut Board of Parole, 443 F.3d 1079, 1086 (2d Cir. 1971)).

6 It is difficult to see how the government’s interest in detaining D.L.C. has materially
7 changed since he was released in May 2022, absent any material circumstances indicating he is a
8 danger to the community or a flight risk. The government’s interest in detaining D.L.C. at this 9 time is extremely low. That ICE has a new policy to make a minimum number of arrests each day
10 under the new administration does not constitute a material change in circumstances or increase 11 the government’s interest in detaining him. See “Trump officials issue quotas to ICE officers to 12 ramp up arrests,” Washington Post (January 26, 2025), available at:

16 sparked-immigration-arrests-and-protests/ (“At the end of May 2025, ‘Stephen Miller, a senior
17 White House official, told Fox News that the White House was looking for ICE to arrest 3,000
18 people a day, a major increase in enforcement. The agency had arrested more than 66,000 people
19 in the first 100 days of the Trump administration, an average of about 660 arrests a day,’ reported
20 the New York Times. Arresting 3,000 people daily would surpass 1 million arrests in a calendar 21 year.”).

22 Moreover, the “fiscal and administrative burdens” that his immediate release and a lawful
23 pre-detention hearing would impose is nonexistent in this case. See Mathews, 424 U.S. at 334-35.
24 D.L.C. does not seek a unique or expensive form of process, but rather a routine hearing 25 regarding whether his release should be revoked and whether he should be re-incarcerated.

26 As the Ninth Circuit noted in 2017, which remains true today, “[t]he costs to the public of 27 immigration detention are ‘staggering’: $158 each day per detainee, amounting to a total daily
28

1 cost of $6.5 million.” Hernandez, 872 F.3d at 996.

2 Alternatively, providing D.L.C. with a hearing before this Court (or a neutral decision-3 maker) regarding release from custody is a routine procedure that the government provides to 4 those in immigration detention facilities daily. At that hearing, the Court would have the 5 opportunity to determine whether circumstances have changed sufficiently to justify his re-arrest.
6 But there is no justifiable reason to re-incarcerate D.L.C. before such a hearing takes place. As 7 the Supreme Court noted in Morrissey, even where the State has an “overwhelming interest in 8 being able to return [a parolee] to imprisonment without the burden of a new adversary criminal 9 trial if in fact he has failed to abide by the conditions of his parole . . . the State has no interest in 10 revoking parole without some informal procedural guarantees.” 408 U.S. at 483.

11 Releasing D.L.C. from unlawful custody and enjoining D.L.C.’s re-arrest until ICE (1)
12 moves for a custody re-determination before an IJ and (2) demonstrates by clear and convincing
13 evidence that D.L.C. is a flight risk or danger to the community is far less costly and burdensome
14 for the government than keeping him detained. Hernandez, 872 F.3d at 996.

15
16 (c) Without a due process hearing prior to any re-arrest, the risk of erroneous deprivation of liberty is high.

17 Releasing D.L.C. from unlawful custody and providing D.L.C. a pre-deprivation hearing
18 would decrease the risk of him being erroneously deprived of his liberty. Before D.L.C. can be 19 lawfully detained, he must be provided with a hearing before a neutral adjudicator at which the 20 government is held to show that there has been sufficiently changed circumstances; such 21 circumstances that ICE’s May 2022 release should be altered or revoked because clear and 22 convincing evidence exists to establish that D.L.C. is a danger to the community or a flight risk.

23 The procedure D.L.C. seeks—a hearing in front of a neutral adjudicator at which the 24 government must prove by clear and convincing evidence that circumstances have changed to 25 justify his detention before any re-arrest—is much more likely to produce accurate determinations
26 regarding factual disputes, such as whether a certain occurrence constitutes a “changed 27 circumstance.” See Chalkboard, Inc. v. Brandt, 902 F.2d 1375, 1381 (9th Cir. 1989) (when 28 “delicate judgments depending on credibility of witnesses and assessment of conditions not

1 subject to measurement” are at issue, the “risk of error is considerable when just determinations
 2 are made after hearing only one side”). “A neutral judge is one of the most basic due process
 3 protections.” Castro-Cortez v. INS, 239 F.3d 1037, 1049 (9th Cir. 2001), abrogated on other
 4 grounds by Fernandez-Vargas v. Gonzales, 548 U.S. 30 (2006). The Ninth Circuit has noted that 5 the risk of an erroneous deprivation of liberty under Mathews can be decreased where a neutral
 6 decisionmaker, rather than ICE alone, makes custody determinations. Diouf v. Napolitano (“Diouf
 7 II”), 634 F.3d 1081, 1091-92 (9th Cir. 2011).

8 Due process also requires consideration of alternatives to detention at any custody 9 redetermination hearing that may occur. The primary purpose of immigration detention is to 10 ensure a noncitizen’s appearance during removal proceedings: Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 697.
 11 Detention is not reasonably related to this purpose if there are alternatives to incarceration that 12 could mitigate the risk of flight. See Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 538 (1979). Accordingly, 13 alternatives to detention must be considered in determining whether D.L.C.’s reincarceration is 14 warranted.

15 As the above-cited authorities show, D.L.C. is likely to succeed on his claim that the 16 current arrest and detention that ICE effected on September 17, 2025, are unlawful. The Due 17 Process Clause requires notice and a hearing before a neutral decision-maker before any 18 reincarceration by ICE. And, at the very minimum, he clearly raises serious questions regarding 19 this issue, thus also meriting a TRO. See Alliance for the Wild Rockies, 632 F.3d at 1135.

20 II. Petitioner Will Suffer Irreparable Harm Absent Injunctive Relief

21 D.L.C. will suffer irreparable harm if he remains detained after being deprived of his 22 liberty and subjected to unlawful incarceration by immigration authorities without being provided 23 the constitutionally adequate process that this motion for a temporary restraining order seeks.
 24 Detainees in ICE custody are held in “prison-like conditions.” Preap v. Johnson, 831 F.3d 1193,
 25 1195 (9th Cir. 2016). As the Supreme Court has explained, “[t]he time spent in jail awaiting trial
 26 has a detrimental impact on the individual. It often means loss of a job; it disrupts family life; and 27 it enforces idleness.” Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 532-33 (1972); accord Nat’l Ctr. for 28

1 Immigrants Rights, Inc. v. I.N.S., 743 F.2d 1365, 1369 (9th Cir. 1984). Moreover, the Ninth
2 Circuit has recognized in “concrete terms the irreparable harms imposed on anyone subject to 3 immigration detention,” including “subpar medical and psychiatric care in ICE detention
4 facilities, the economic burdens imposed on detainees and their families as a result of detention,
5 and the collateral harms to children of detainees whose parents are detained.” Hernandez, 872
6 F.3d at 995. The government itself has documented alarmingly poor conditions in ICE detention
7 centers. See, e.g., DHS, Office of Inspector General (OIG), Summary of Unannounced
8 Inspections of ICE Facilities Conducted in Fiscal Years 2020-2023 (2024) (reporting violations of 9 environmental health and safety standards; staffing shortages affecting the level of care detainees
10 received for suicide watch, and detainees being held in administrative segregation in unauthorized 11 restraints, without being allowed time outside their cell, and with no documentation that they 12 were provided health care or three meals a day).

13 D.L.C. established a life in Bakersfield, California. Prior to his detention he was living
14 with his partner and her daughter, whom he treats as his own. He worked full time as production
15 to provide for his partner and her daughter. D.L.C. has obtained a work authorization card. D.L.C.
16 has never committed any crimes nor been arrested for any reason. D.L.C. is currently detained at 17 Mesa Verde. Before his detention, D.L.C. was an essential financial contributor to his family. The 18 detention has caused him severe emotional distress knowing that his family is struggling to 19 survive without him. The financial and emotional hardship on his loved ones, due to D.L.C.’s 20 detention, has been severe. Every additional day D.L.C. spends in unlawful detention subjects 21 him and others to further irreparable harm.

22 As detailed supra, D.L.C. contends that his re-arrest, absent a hearing before a neutral
23 adjudicator, violates his due process rights under the Constitution. It is clear that “the deprivation
24 of constitutional rights ‘unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury.’” Melendres v. Arpaio, 695
25 F.3d 990, 1002 (9th Cir. 2012) (quoting Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373 (1976)). Thus, a 26 temporary restraining order is necessary to prevent D.L.C. from suffering irreparable harm by 27 being subject to unlawful and unjust detention.
28

III. The Balance of Equities and the Public Interest Favor Granting this Temporary Restraining Order

The balance of equities and the public interest undoubtedly favor granting this temporary restraining order.

First, the balance of hardships strongly favors D.L.C. The government cannot suffer harm from an injunction that prevents it from engaging in an unlawful practice. See Zepeda v. I.N.S., 753 F.2d 719, 727 (9th Cir. 1983) (“[T]he INS cannot reasonably assert that it is harmed in any legally cognizable sense by being enjoined from constitutional violations.”). Therefore, the government cannot allege harm arising from a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction ordering it to comply with the Constitution.

Further, any burden imposed by requiring the ICE to release D.L.C. from unlawful custody and refrain from re-arrest unless and until he is provided a hearing before a neutral is both de minimis and clearly outweighed by the substantial harm he will suffer as if he is detained. See Lopez v. Heckler, 713 F.2d 1432, 1437 (9th Cir. 1983) (“Society’s interest lies on the side of affording fair procedures to all persons, even though the expenditure of governmental funds is required.”).

A temporary restraining order is in the public interest. First and most importantly, “it would not be equitable or in the public’s interest to allow [a party] . . . to violate the requirements of federal law, especially when there are no adequate remedies available.” Ariz. Dream Act Coal. v. Brewer, 757 F.3d 1053, 1069 (9th Cir. 2014) (quoting Valle del Sol Inc. v. Whiting, 732 F.3d 1006, 1029 (9th Cir. 2013)). If a temporary restraining order is not entered, the government would effectively be granted permission to detain D.L.C. in violation of the requirements of Due Process. “The public interest and the balance of the equities favor ‘prevent[ing] the violation of a party’s constitutional rights.’” Ariz. Dream Act Coal., 757 F.3d at 1069 (quoting Melendres, 695 F.3d at 1002); see also Hernandez, 872 F.3d at 996 (“The public interest benefits from an injunction that ensures that individuals are not deprived of their liberty and held in immigration detention because of bonds established by a likely unconstitutional process.”); cf. Preminger v. Principi, 422 F.3d 815, 826 (9th Cir. 2005) (“Generally, public interest concerns are implicated

1 when a constitutional right has been violated, because all citizens have a stake in upholding the 2 Constitution.”).

3 Therefore, the public interest overwhelmingly favors entering a temporary restraining 4 order and preliminary injunction.

5 CONCLUSION

6 For all the above reasons, this Court should find that D.L.C. warrants a temporary 7 restraining order and a preliminary injunction ordering that Respondents (1) release him from his 8 unlawful custody; (2) refrain from re-arresting him unless and until he is afforded a hearing
9 before a neutral adjudicator on whether a change in custody is justified by clear and convincing 10 evidence that he is a danger to the community or a flight risk; and (3) refrain from sending him to 11 any place outside of the United States.
