Case No. 25-cv-3278-JWL

RESPONSE TO § 2241 HABEAS PETITION AND ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

Petitioner seeks a writ of habeas corpus pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241 to challenge his recent detention by Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE). Petitioner alleges that he cannot be subject to mandatory immigration detention but, rather, must be released on bond. As explained herein, Petitioner is not entitled to any relief on his petition.

Petitioner is lawfully detained on a mandatory basis as an alien present in the United States without inspection or parole. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(2). A plain reading of 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2) supports a finding that Petitioner is subject to mandatory detention. As an alien who has not been admitted into the United States, Petitioner is considered an applicant for admission in the United States and therefore “shall be detained” during the pendency of his removal proceedings. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A)Error! Bookmark not defined. For these reasons, and those herein, the Court should deny the Petition.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Before 1996, the federal immigration laws required the detention of aliens who presented at a port of entry but allowed aliens who were already unlawfully present in the United States to obtain release pending removal proceedings. Congress passed the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigration Responsibility Act (“IIRIRA”) specifically to stop conferring greater privileges and benefits on aliens who enter the United States unlawfully as compared to those who lawfully present themselves for inspection at a port of entry.

As relevant here, Congress enacted what is now 8 U.S.C. § 1225, which requires the detention of any alien “who is an applicant for admission” and defines that term to encompass any “alien present in the United States who has not been admitted” following inspection by immigration authorities. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a), (b)(2)(A). Section 1225 makes no exception for how far into the country the alien traveled or how long the alien managed to evade detection. There is no dispute that Petitioner is an “applicant for admission” under Section 1225(a). That provision specifically provides that any “alien present in the United States who has not been admitted . . . shall be deemed for purposes of this chapter an applicant for admission.” § 1225(a)(1). Because Petitioner was never “admitted” to the United States (a fact that Petitioner does not contest) he remains unambiguously an “applicant for admission.”

Despite the clear statutory text, Petitioner argues that the mandatory detention provision of § 1225(b)(2)(A) does not apply to him because he was already living in the United States when he was apprehended. (Doc. 1, ¶¶ 50-51). According to Petitioner, he should instead be entitled a bond hearing under 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a). This reading is atextual. On its face, that provision applies to numerous aliens not subject to Section 1225(b)(2)(A), including all admitted aliens who are now removable—such as the millions of aliens in the United States that were lawfully admitted but then overstayed their visas. For those aliens, Section 1226 continues to govern detention. Moreover, the mere fact of partial overlap is insufficient to rewrite clear statutory text. Although the Government has previously operated under a different (and erroneous) understanding of the law, this Court must apply the language of Section 1225(b)(2)(A) as written.

Ultimately, what Petitioner endorses is the type of backwards outcome—that IIRIRA was meant to eliminate—requiring the detention of aliens who present at a port of entry as the law requires but authorizing the release of those aliens who enter the United States in violation of law. Petitioner’s Petition for Habeas Corpus should be denied.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

The basic facts of this case are not in dispute. Petitioner is a native and citizen of Cuba. (Doc. 1, ¶ 14; Doc. 1-2, pg. 4). Petitioner entered the United States illegally on June 2, 2022, without inspection or admission. On that date, Petitioner was encountered by Border Patrol after crossing into the United States without permission near Eagle Pass, Texas. (Doc. 1-2, pg. 4). Petitioner was arrested by Border Patrol but was served an I-220A and released on his own recognizance.¹ (Doc. 1-2, pg. 4).

On July 6, 2025, Petitioner attempted to purchase a firearm in Salina, Kansas and was denied. (Doc. 1-2, pg. 3). Petitioner was subsequently indicted for knowingly making a false or fictitious oral or written statement or furnishing or exhibiting any false, fictitious, or misrepresented identification in connection with the attempted firearm purchase. (Doc. 1-2, pg. 3). Petitioner was arrested by the Salina Police Department on August 4, 2025. (Doc. 1-2, pg. 3).

¹ The I-220A release on recognizance “form does not confer parole or any other immigration benefit; it merely reflects a decision to release an individual from custody pending further removal proceedings.” Quintero v. Field Off. Dir. of Miami ICE Field Off., No. 25-22428-CIV, 2025 WL 2588099, at *4 (S.D. Fla. June 23, 2025), vacated and remanded as moot, No. 25-12147, 2025 WL 2589756 (11th Cir. Sept. 5, 2025).

On or about August 8, 2025, Petitioner was served an I-200 arrest warrant and taken into ICE custody at the Chase County, Kansas Detention Center. (Doc. 1, ¶ 22; Doc. 1-2, pgs. 3-4). Pursuant to 8 § U.S.C. 1225(b)(2)(A), DHS initiated removal proceedings against Petitioner under 8 U.S.C. § 1229a. (Doc. 1, ¶ 23).²

Petitioner now brings this habeas claim asserting that he is bond-eligible because he should instead fall under 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a), which gives the Attorney General the discretion to detain or release the alien on bond through the pendency of removal proceedings. Petitioner styles his habeas petition as three distinct claims: a violation of the INA (Count I), a violation of the bond regulations (Count II), and a violation of due process (Count III). See (Doc. 1 ¶¶ 52–63). These Counts, however, present the same central statutory challenge: that Petitioner’s detention is unlawful because he is entitled to a bond hearing as an alien detained under section 1226, not section 1225. As discussed herein, Petitioner’s habeas petition should be denied because he is subject to mandatory detention, not discretionary detention as he alleges.

ARGUMENT AND AUTHORITIES

I. Statutory Framework

A. The pre-IIRIRA framework gave preferential treatment to aliens unlawfully present in the United States.

The Immigration and Nationality Act (“INA”), as amended, contains a comprehensive framework governing the regulation of aliens, including the creation of proceedings for the removal of aliens unlawfully in the United States and requirements for when the Executive is obligated to detain aliens pending removal.

Prior to 1996, the INA treated aliens differently based on whether the alien had physically “entered” the United States. Matter of Yajure Hurtado, 29 I. & N. Dec. 216, 222-223 (BIA 2025) (citing 8 U.S.C. §§ 1225(a), 1251 (1994)); see Hing Sum v. Holder, 602 F.3d 1092, 1099-1100 (9th Cir. 2010) (same). “Entry” referred to “any coming of an alien into the United States,” 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(13) (1994), and whether an alien had physically entered the United States (or not) “dictated what type of [removal] proceeding applied” and whether the alien would be detained pending those proceedings, Hing Sum v. Holder, 602 F.3d at 1099.

² The merits hearing portion of Petitioner’s removal proceedings began on December 10, 2025, and recently concluded on January 26, 2026. Upon issuance of an Order by the IJ regarding removal, The United States may seek to dismiss this Habeas Petition as moot.

At the time, the INA “provided for two types of removal proceedings: deportation hearings and exclusion hearings” Hose v. I.N.S., 180 F.3d 992, 994 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc). An alien who arrived at a port of entry would be placed in “exclusion proceedings and subject to mandatory detention, with potential release solely by means of a grant of parole.” Hurtado, 29 I. & N. Dec. at 223; see 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)-(b) (1995); id. § 1226(a) (1995). In contrast, an alien who physically entered the United States unlawfully would be placed in deportation proceedings. Id.; Hing Sum, 602 F.3d at 1100. Aliens in deportation proceedings, unlike those in exclusion proceedings, “were entitled to request release on bond.” Hurtado, 29 I. & N. Dec. at 223 (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(1) (1994)).

Thus, the INA’s prior framework distinguishing between aliens based on physical “entry” had:

the ‘unintended and undesirable consequence’ of having created a statutory scheme where aliens who entered without inspection ‘could take advantage of the greater procedural and substantive rights afforded in deportation proceedings,’ including the right to request release on bond, while aliens who had ‘actually presented themselves to authorities for inspection ... were subject to mandatory custody.

Hurtado, 29 I. & N. Dec. at 223 (emphasis added) (quoting Martinez v. Att’y General of U.S., 693 F.3d 408, 413 n.5 (2012)); see also Hing Sum, 602 F.3d at 1100 (similar); H.R. Rep. No.

104-469, pt. 1, at 225 (1996) (“House Rep.”) (“illegal aliens who have entered the United States without inspection gain equities and privileges in immigration proceedings that are not available to aliens who present themselves for inspection”).

B. The IIRIRA eliminated the preferential treatment of aliens unlawfully present in the United States and mandated detention of all “applicants for admission.”

Congress discarded that regime through enactment of IIRIRA, Pub. L. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009 (Sept. 30, 1996). Among other things, that law had the goal of “ensur[ing] that all immigrants who have not been lawfully admitted, regardless of their legal presence in the country, are placed on equal footing in removal proceedings under the INA.” Torres v. Barr, 976 F.3d 918, 928 (9th Cir. 2020) (en banc).

To that end, IIRIRA replaced the prior focus on physical “entry” and instead made lawful “admission” the governing touchstone. IIRIRA defined “admission” to mean “the lawful entry of the alien into the United States after inspection and authorization by an immigration officer.” 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(13)(A) (emphasis added). In other words, the immigration laws would no longer distinguish aliens based on whether they had managed to evade detection and enter the country without permission. Instead, the “pivotal factor in determining an alien’s status” would be “whether or not the alien has been lawfully admitted.” House Rep., supra, at 226 (emphasis added); Hing Sum v. Holder, 602 F.3d at 1100 (similar). IIRIRA also eliminated the exclusion-deportation dichotomy and consolidated both sets of proceedings into “removal proceedings.” Hurtado, 29 I. & N. Dec. at 223.

IIRIRA effected these changes through several provisions codified in Section 1225 of Title 8:

Section 1225(a): Section 1225(a) codifies Congress’s decision to make lawful

“admission,” rather than physical entry, the touchstone. That provision states that an alien “present in the United States who has not been admitted or who arrives in the United States” “shall be deemed ... an applicant for admission”:

An alien present in the United States who has not been admitted or who arrives in the United States (whether or not at a designated port of arrival and including an alien who is brought to the United States after having been interdicted in international or United States waters) shall be deemed for purposes of this chapter an applicant for admission.

8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(1). “All aliens ... who are applicants for admission or otherwise seeking admission or readmission to or transit through the United States” are required to “be inspected by [an] immigration officer[.]” Id. § 1225(a)(3). The inspection by the immigration officer is designed to determine whether the alien may be lawfully “admitted” to the country or, instead, must be referred to removal proceedings.

Section 1225(b): IIRIRA also divided removal proceedings into two tracks—expedited removal and non-expedited “Section 240” proceedings—and mandated that applicants for admission be detained pending those proceedings. 8 U.S.C. §§ 1225(b)(1)-(2).

Section 1225(b)(1) provides for so-called “expedited removal proceedings,” DHS v. Thuraissigiam, 591 U.S. 103, 109-113 (2020), which can potentially be applied to a subset of aliens—those who (1) are “arriving in the United States,” or who (2) have “not been admitted or paroled into the United States” and have “not affirmatively shown, to the satisfaction of an immigration officer, that the alien has been physically present in the United States continuously for the 2-year period immediately prior to the date of the determination of inadmissibility.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(A)(i)-(iii). As to these aliens, the immigration officer shall “order the alien removed from the United States without further hearing or review unless the alien indicates either an intention to apply for asylum ... or a fear of persecution.” Id. § 1225(b)(1)(A)(i). In that event, the alien “shall be detained pending a final determination of credible fear or persecution and, if found not to have such fear, until removed.” Id. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(iii)(IV); see also 8 C.F.R. § 235.5(b)(4)(ii). An alien processed for expedited removal who does not indicate an intent to apply for a form of relief from removal is likewise detained until removed. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(A)(i), (B)(iii)(IV); see 8 C.F.R. § 235.3(b)(2)(iii).

Section 1225(b)(2) is a “catchall provision that applies to all applicants for admission not covered by [subsection (b)(1)].” Jennings v. Rodriguez, 583 U.S. 281, 287 (2018). It requires that those aliens be detained pending Section 240 removal proceedings:

Subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C), in the case of an alien who is an applicant for admission, if the examining immigration officer determines that an alien seeking admission is not clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted, the alien shall be detained for a proceeding under section 1229a of this title [Section 240].

8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A) (emphasis added).³ See 8 C.F.R. § 253.3(b)(1)(ii) (mirroring Section 1225(b)(2) detention mandate); Jennings, 583 U.S. at 302 (holding that Section 1225(b)(2) “mandate detention of aliens throughout the completion of applicable proceedings and not just until the moment those proceedings begin”).

While Section 1225(b)(2) does not allow for aliens to be released on bond, the INA grants DHS discretion to exercise its parole authority to temporarily release an applicant for admission, but “only on a case-by-case basis for urgent humanitarian reasons or significant public benefit.” 8 U.S.C. § 1182(d)(5)(A). Parole, however, “shall not be regarded as admission of the alien.” Id.; Jennings, 583 U.S. at 288 (discussing parole authority). Moreover, when the Secretary determines that “the purposes of such parole ... been served,” the “alien shall ... be returned to the custody from which he was paroled” and be “dealt with in the same manner as that of any other applicant for admission to the United States.” 8 U.S.C. § 1182(d)(5)(A).

Section 1226: IIRIRA also created a separate authority addressing the arrest, detention, and release of aliens generally (versus applicants for admission specifically). See 8 U.S.C. § 1226. This is the only provision that governs the detention of aliens who, for example, lawfully enter the country but overstay or otherwise violate the terms of their visas, or are later determined to have been improperly admitted. The statute provides that “[o]n a warrant issued by the Attorney General, an alien may be arrested and detained pending a decision on whether the alien is to be removed from the United States.” Id. § 1226(a). Detention under this provision is generally discretionary: The Attorney General “may” either “continue to detain the arrested alien” or release the alien on bond or conditional parole. Id. § 1226(a)(1)-(2).⁴

That “default rule,” however, does not apply to certain criminal aliens who are being released from detention by another law enforcement agency. Jennings, 583 U.S. at 288; see 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c). Section 1226(c) provides that “[t]he Attorney General shall take into custody” certain classes of criminal aliens—those who are inadmissible or deportable because the alien (1) “committed” certain offenses delineated in 8 U.S.C. §§ 1182 and 1227; or (2) engaged in terrorism-related activities. 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1). The Executive must detain these aliens “when the alien is released, without regard to whether the alien is released on parole, supervised release, or probation, and without regard to whether the alien may be arrested or imprisoned again for the same offense.” Id.

Congress recently amended Section 1226(c) through the Laken Riley Act, Pub. L. No. 119-1, § 2, 139 Stat. 3, 3, (2025), which requires detention of (and prohibits parole for) aliens who (1) are inadmissible because they are physically present in the United States without admission or parole, have committed a material misrepresentation or fraud, or lack required documentation; and (2) are “charged with, arrested for, [] convicted of, admit[] having committed, or admit[] committing acts which constitute the essential elements of” certain listed offenses. 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(E).

C. DHS and the Board of Immigration Appeals conclude that Section 1225(b)(2) requires detention of all applicants for admission.

For many years after IIRIRA, immigration judges treated aliens who entered the United States without admission and were later detained away from the border as being subject to discretionary detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a) rather than mandatory detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2). See Hurtado, 29 I. & N. Dec. at 225 n.6.

On July 8, 2025, DHS “revisited its legal position on detention and release authorities” and issued interim guidance that brought the Executive’s practices in line with the statute’s plain text. See (U.S. Customs and Border Protection Commissioner Rodney S. Scott memorandum dated July 10, 2025 [attached as Exhibit A]). Specifically, DHS concluded that all aliens who enter the country without being admitted or who otherwise arrive in the United States without proper documentation are “subject to mandatory detention under INA § 235(b) [8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)] and may not be released from ICE custody except by INA § 212(d)(5) parole.” Id. As a result, the “only aliens eligible for a custody determination and release on recognizance, bond, or other conditions under the INA § 236(a) [8 U.S.C. § 1226(a)] are aliens admitted to the United States and chargeable with deportability under INA § 237 [8 U.S.C. § 1127].” Id.

The Board of Immigration Appeals soon adopted this interpretation in Hurtado. The Board concluded that Section 1225(b)(2)’s mandatory detention regime applies to all aliens who entered the United States without inspection and admission:

Aliens ... who surreptitiously cross into the United States remain applicants for admission until and unless they are lawfully inspected and admitted by an immigration officer. Remaining in the United State for a lengthy period of time following entry without inspection, by itself, does not constitute an “admission.”

29 I. & N. Dec. at 228; see also id. at 225 (“Immigration Judges lack authority to hear bond requests or to grant bond to aliens ... who are present in the United States without admission”).

In so concluding, the BIA rejected the alien’s argument that “because he has been residing in the interior of the United States for almost 3 years ... he cannot be considered as ‘seeking admission.’” Id. at 221. The BIA determined that this argument “is not supported by the plain language of the INA” and creates a “legal conundrum.” Id. If the alien “is not admitted to the United States (as he admits) but he is not ‘seeking admission’ (as he contends), then what is his legal status?” Id. (parentheticals in original).

II. Petitioner is not entitled to any relief, because he is an applicant for admission who may properly be subjected to mandatory detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1225 without any requirement for a bond hearing.

Pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A), “in the case of an alien who is an applicant for admission, if the examining immigration officer determines that an alien seeking admission is not clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted, the alien shall be detained for a proceeding under section 1229a [removal proceedings].” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A). The Supreme Court has held that section 1225(b)(2)(A) is a mandatory detention statute and that aliens detained pursuant to that provision are not entitled to bond. Jennings, 583 U.S. at 287 (“Both § 1225(b)(1) and § 1225(b)(2) authorize the detention of certain aliens.”).

As discussed above, Section 1225(a) defines “applicant for admission” to encompass an alien who either “arrives in the United States” or who is “present in the United States who has not been admitted.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(1). And “admission” under the INA means not physical entry, but lawful entry after inspection by immigration authorities. 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(13)(A); Mejia Olalde v. Noem, 2025 WL 3131942, at *3 (E.D. Mo. Nov. 10, 2025). Thus, an alien who enters the country without permission is and remains an applicant for admission, regardless of the duration of the alien’s presence in the United States or the alien’s distance from the border.

Petitioner falls squarely within section 1225(b)(2)(A)’s mandatory detention requirement as Petitioner is an “applicant for admission” to the United States. Petitioner is “present in the United States,” and there is no dispute that he has “not been admitted.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a).⁵ Congress’s broad language here is unequivocally intentional—an undocumented alien is to be “deemed for purposes of this chapter an applicant for admission.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(1). Thus, regardless of Petitioner’s characterization, he is “deemed” an applicant for admission based on Petitioner’s failure to seek lawful admission to the United States before an immigration officer, which is undisputed. And because Petitioner cannot—and did not—establish that he is “clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted,” he “shall be detained for a proceeding under [8 U.S.C. § 1229a].” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A).

Thus, under the plain language of Section 1225(b)(2), DHS is required to detain all aliens, like Petitioner, who are present in the United States without admission and are subject to removal proceedings—regardless of how long the alien has been in the United States or how far from the border they ventured. That unambiguous language resolves this case. See Little Sisters of the Poor Saints Peter & Paul Home v. Pennsylvania, 591 U.S. 657, 676 (2020) (“Our analysis begins and ends with the text.”).

III. The contrary decisions of other district courts are mistaken and should not override the clear congressional mandate of detention under the provisions of 8 U.S.C. §1225(b).

⁵ Moreover, Petitioner cannot—and did not—establish that he is “clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A).

Congress provided that mandatory detention pending removal proceedings is the norm—not the exception—for those who enter the country without inspection and who lack documents sufficient for admission or entry. See 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2). And for good reason: detention pending removal proceedings is the historical norm and, in this context, reflects the reality that aliens have avoided inspection by sneaking into the United States. See Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510, 523 (2003) (citing Wong Wing v. United States, 163 U.S. 228, 235 (1896)). When Congress enacted 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b) as part of the immigration reforms of 1996, it determined that treating all unadmitted aliens similarly in terms of detention and removal eliminated unintended consequences and perverse incentives that pervaded the prior system, under which undocumented aliens who entered without inspection received more procedural protections—including the ability to seek release on bond—than those who presented themselves for inspection at ports of entry. In essence, the pre-1996 law favored those that entered the U.S. illegally and clandestinely, which Congress sought to end. Through mandatory detention of applicants for admission, Congress further ensured that the Executive Branch could give effect to the provisions for removal of aliens. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 531.

The legislative history is instructive. As explained by the BIA in Yajure Hurtado, before the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (“IIRIRA”), the INA provided for inspection of only immigrants arriving at a port of entry. Id. at 222. Aliens in the United States were put into removal proceedings but were bond eligible. Id. at 223.

Congress acted, in part, to remedy the “unintended and undesirable consequence” of having created a statutory scheme where aliens who entered without inspection “could take advantage of the greater procedural and substantive rights afforded in deportation proceedings,” including the right to request release on bond, while aliens who had “actually presented themselves to authorities for inspection were restrained by ‘more summary exclusion proceedings,’” and were subject to mandatory custody. (Citing

Martinez v. Att’y Gen. of U.S., 693 F.3d 408, 413 n.5 (3d Cir. 2012). . . Thus, after the 1996 enactment of the IIRIRA, aliens who enter the United States without inspection or admission are “applicants for admission” under section 235(a)(1) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(1), and subject to the inspection, detention, and removal procedures of section 235(b) of the INA.

Id. at 223.

As Petitioner notes, many district courts have rejected Matter of Yajure Hurtado concluding that Section 1225(b)(2)’s reference to aliens “seeking admission” narrows its scope to aliens who take affirmative steps to gain legal admission to the United States. (Doc. 1, ¶¶ 43-44).⁶ But this case turns on the statutory text—not on the opinions of other district courts. And from the government’s view the analysis employed by these district courts and relied upon by Petitioner, see (Doc. 1, ¶¶ 44-51), is misguided.⁷

A. An alien who is an “applicant for admission” is “seeking admission” to the United States.

As the District Court for the Northern District of Texas observed, the analysis relies on a “hair-splitting emphasis on the phrase ‘seeking admission’ [that] elevates form over substance.”

⁶ Other district courts in our circuit have more recently also agreed with the position advanced by Petitioner. See, e.g., Medina Vasquez, v. Grant, et al., No. CIV-25-1377-D, 2026 WL 209979, at *3 (W.D. Okla. Jan. 27, 2026); Diaz Lopez, V. Noem, et al., No. 25-CV-04089-NYW, 2026 WL 206220, at *4 (D. Colo. Jan. 27, 2026); *Jovel v. ⁷ Many district courts have also adopted the Respondents’ and the BIA’s interpretation. See, e.g., Goyo Martinez v. Villegas, et al., No. 1:25-CV-256-H, 2026 WL 114418 (N.D. Tex. Jan. 15, 2026); Garibay-Robledo, 1:25-CV-00177, 2025 WL 2638672 (N.D. Tex. July 28, 2025) (albeit in a different context, but adopted the reasoning at issue here when it stated that a Brazilian national who entered the country illegally in 2005 “remains an applicant for admission” in 2025).

Goyo Martinez v. Villegas, et al., No. 1:25-CV-256-H, 2026 WL 114418, at *1 (N.D. Tex. Jan. 15, 2026)

Section 1225(b)(2) requires the detention of an “applicant for admission, if the examining officer determines that [the] alien seeking admission is not clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A) (emphasis added). The statutory text and context show that being an “applicant for admission” is a means of “seeking admission”—no additional affirmative step is necessary. In other words, every “applicant for admission” is inherently and necessarily “seeking admission,” at least absent a choice to pursue voluntary withdrawal or voluntary departure.

Section 1225(a) provides that “[a]ll aliens ... who are applicants for admission or otherwise seeking admission or readmission ... shall be inspected.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(3) (emphasis added). The word “[o]therwise” means “in a different way or manner[.]” Texas Dep’t of Hous. & Cmty. Affs. v. Inclusive Communities Project, Inc., 576 U.S. 519, 535 (2015) (quoting Webster’s Third New International Dictionary 1598 (1971)); see also Att’y Gen. of United States v. Wynn, 104 F.4th 348, 354 (D.C. Cir. 2024) (same); Villarreal v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 839 F.3d 958, 963-64 (11th Cir. 2016) (en banc) (“or otherwise” means “the first action is a subset of the second action”); Kleber v. CareFusion Corp., 914 F.3d 480, 482-83 (7th Cir. 2019). Being an “applicant for admission” is thus a particular “way or manner” of seeking admission, such that an alien who is an “applicant for admission” is “seeking admission” for purposes of Section 1252(b)(2)(A). No separate affirmative act is necessary. See Matter of Lemus-Losa, 25 I & N Dec. 734, 743 (BIA 2012) (“[M]any people who are not actually requesting permission to enter the United States in the ordinary sense are nevertheless deemed to be ‘seeking admission’ under the immigration laws”).

This reading is consistent with the everyday meaning of the statutory terms. One may “seek” something without “applying” for it—for example, one who is “seeking” happiness is not “applying” for it. But one applying for something is necessarily seeking it. Compare Webster’s New World College Dictionary 69 (4th ed.) (“apply” means “To make a formal request (to someone for something)”), with id. at 1299 (“seek” means “to request, ask for”). For example, a person who is “applying” for admission to a college or club is “seeking” admission to the college or club. See The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language 63 (1980) (“American Heritage Dictionary”) (“apply” means “[t]o request or seek employment, acceptance, or admission”) (emphasis added). Likewise, an alien who is “applying” for admission to the United States (i.e., an “applicant for admission”) is “seeking admission” to the United States. And that’s true even when the alien has been physically present in the country for many years, as that alien can “still be an applicant for lawful entry, seeking legal ‘admission.’” Mejia Olalde, 2025 WL 3131942, at *3. As the geographic and temporal limits in the neighboring provision, Section 1225(b)(1), demonstrate, “[i]f Congress meant to say that an alien no longer is ‘seeking admission’ after some amount of time in the United States, Congress knew how to do so.” Id. at *4.

None of this is to say, however, that “seeking admission” has no meaning beyond “applicant for admission.” As Section 1225(a)(3) shows, being an “applicant for admission” is only one “way or manner” of “seeking admission,” supra, p. 15—not the exclusive way. For example, lawful permanent residents returning to the United States are not “applicants for admission” because they are already admitted, but they still may be “seeking admission.” See 8 U.S.C. § 1103(A)(13)(C). But for purposes of Section 1225(b)(2) and its regulation of “applicants for admission,” the statute unambiguously provides that an alien who is an “applicant for admission” is “seeking admission,” even if the alien is not engaged in some separate, affirmative act to obtain lawful admission.

Thus, under a straightforward reading of the statute, being an “applicant for admission” is “seeking admission.” Although that reading may lead to some redundancy in Section 1225(b)(2)(A), that is “not a license to rewrite” Section 1225 “contrary to its text.” Barton, 590 U.S. at 223; see Heyman v. Cooper, 31 F.4th 1315, 1322 (11th Cir. 2022) (The “principle [that drafters do repeat themselves] carries extra weight where ... the arguably redundant words that the drafters employed ... are functional synonyms”). And that is especially true, where that re-writing would be so clearly contrary to Congress’s objective in passing the law.

To be sure, the Government previously operated under a narrower understanding of Section 1225(b)(2)(A), such that aliens present in the United States who had entered without admission were instead detained under Section 1226(a). But past practice does not justify disregard of clear statutory language. Armstrong v. Exceptional Child Ctr., Inc., 575 U.S. 320, 329 (2015); see also Goyo Martinez, 2026 WL 114418, at *7 (“Because the statute prevents ICE from giving Goyo Martinez the relief he seeks, he cannot “turn[] back the clock” to a time when such relief was available as a matter of practice.”). Indeed, in the context of this very statute the Supreme Court has previously rejected longstanding government interpretations that it deemed incompatible with statutory text. See Pereira v. Sessions, 585 U.S. 198, 204-05, 208-09 (2018). A court therefore must always interpret the statute “as written,” Henry Schein, Inc. v. Archer & White Sales, Inc., 586 U.S. 63, 68 (2019), and here the statute as written requires detention of any applicant for admission, regardless of whether the applicant is taking affirmative steps toward admission. A “nontextual” practice cannot upend that plain statutory meaning. Mejia Olalde, 2025 WL 3131942, at *5 (rejecting the Government’s prior understanding as “nontextual” and unsupported by any “thorough, reasoned analysis”).

B. The Supreme Court’s decision in Jennings does not undermine the government’s interpretation.

The Government’s interpretation is consistent with the Supreme Court’s decision in Jennings, 583 U.S. 281 (2018). Jennings reviewed a Ninth Circuit decision that applied constitutional avoidance to “impos[e] an implicit 6-month time limit on an alien’s detention” under Sections 1225(b) and 1226. 583 U.S. at 292. The Court held that neither provision is so limited. Id. at 292, 296-306. In reaching that holding, the Court did not—and did not need to—resolve the precise groups of aliens subject to Section 1225(b) or Section 1226. Nonetheless, consistent with the Government’s reading, the Court recognized in its description of Section 1225(b) that “Section 1225(b)(2) serves as a catchall provision that applies to all applicants for admission not covered by §1225(b)(1).” Id. at 287.

Some lower courts have rejected the Government’s interpretation based on language in Jennings where the Court described the detention authorities in Section 1225(b) and Section 1226, and in that context summarized Section 1226 as applying to aliens “already in the country”:

In sum, U.S. immigration law authorizes the Government to detain certain aliens seeking admission into the country under §§ 1225(b)(1) and (b)(2). It also authorizes the Government to detain certain aliens already in the country pending the outcome of removal proceedings under §§ 1226(a) and (c).

583 U.S. at 289; see also id. at 288 (characterizing Section 1226 as applying to aliens “once inside the United States”). The Government’s interpretation is perfectly consistent with that language: it allows that Section 1226 is the exclusive source of detention authority for the substantial category of aliens who were admitted into the United States (and so are “in the country”) but are now removable. Indeed, in context, the best reading of that language in Jennings is that the discussion refers to aliens who are “in and admitted to the United States.” § U.S.C. § 1227(a). The opinion’s reference to aliens “present in the country” specifically cites Section 1227(a), which covers only admitted aliens. See 583 U.S. at 288. Moreover, nothing in the quoted language from Jennings suggests that Section 1226 is the sole detention authority that applies to “aliens already in the country.” Indeed, the passage’s use of the word “certain” conveys the opposite. At a minimum, the quoted language is ambiguous and such uncertain language is insufficient to displace the statute’s plain text and the manifest congressional purpose. See Nat’l Pork Producers Council v. Ross, 598 U.S. 356, 373-74 (2023) (explaining that “the language of an opinion is not always to be parsed as though we were dealing with language of a statute,” and instead “must be read with a careful eye to context” (citation omitted)). That is especially so as no part of the holding in Jennings required it to decide the precise scope of Sections 1225(b) and 1226.

IV. The Due Process Clause does not entitle Petitioner to any relief.

The Due Process Clause provides no relief to Petitioner. Mandatory detention under § 1225(b)(2) is constitutionally permissible. And resolution one way or another is undoubtedly forthcoming given that Petitioner’s merits hearing recently concluded on January 26, 2026. Petitioner’s ample available process in his current removal proceedings demonstrate no lack of Procedural Due Process—nor any deprivation of liberty “sufficiently outrageous” required to establish a Substantive Due Process claim. See generally Reed v. Goertz, 598 U.S. 230, 236 (2023). Congress simply made the decision to detain him pending removal which is a “constitutionally permissible part of that process.” See Demore, 538 U.S. at 531.

The Supreme Court has held that detention during removal proceedings, even without access to a bond hearing, is constitutional. In Demore, the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of § 1226(c), which mandates the detention of certain aliens during removal proceedings without access to bond hearings. 538 U.S. at 522. The Court “recognized detention during deportation proceedings as a constitutionally valid aspect of the deportation process,” and reaffirmed its “longstanding view that the Government may constitutionally detain deportable aliens during the limited period necessary for their removal proceedings.” Id. at 523, 526. The Court further explained that “when the Government deals with deportable aliens, the Due Process Clause does not require it to employ the least burdensome means to accomplish its goal.” Id. at 528. With respect to due process concerns, the Court recognized that it “has firmly and repeatedly endorsed the proposition that Congress may make rules as to aliens that would be unacceptable if applied to citizens.” Id. at 522.

Here, Petitioner is being detained for the limited purpose of removal proceedings and determining his removability. Such detention is not punitive or done for other reasons than to address removability, which will occur in the removal proceedings. Whether framed as a substantive or procedural due process claim, the principles set forth in Demore govern this case. Substantive due process protects “only ‘those fundamental rights and liberties which are, objectively, deeply rooted in this Nation’s history and tradition.’” Dep’t of State v. Muñoz, 602 U.S. 899, 910 (2024) (quoting Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702, 720–21 (1997)). Any substantive due process claim therefore fails here because “the through line of history” is that the federal government has “sovereign authority to set the terms governing the admission and exclusion of noncitizens.” Id. at 911, 912. Indeed, Congress in exercising this “broad power over naturalization and immigration . . . regularly makes rules that would be unacceptable if applied to citizens.” Demore, 538 U.S. at 522 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Consistent with these principles, the Supreme Court has long recognized that “the Government may constitutionally detain deportable aliens during the limited period necessary for their removal proceedings.” Id. at 526.

Similarly, Petitioner cannot succeed on a procedural due process claim. Such a claim fails because where Congress has substantively mandated detention pending removal proceedings, an alien cannot displace that substantive choice with a procedural due process claim. As discussed, aliens are not entitled to bond hearings as a matter of substantive due process. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 523–29. Under Demore, Congress may reasonably determine—as it did here—to subject aliens who were never inspected or admitted to this country to detention without bond while the government determines their removability. And “an alien in [that] position has only those rights regarding admission that Congress has provided by statute.” Thuraissigiam, 591 U.S. at 140. Congress has not created any procedural rights to a bond hearing for applicants for admission. See Jennings, 583 U.S. at 297. “Read most naturally,” section 1225 “mandate[s] detention of applicants for admission until certain proceedings have concluded.” Id. And the statute says nothing “whatsoever about bond hearings.” Id. No procedural due process claim is stated.

V. The Court lacks jurisdiction to second guess or overturn the IJ’s factual determination that Petitioner was not paroled.

Judicial review of certain questions of law and fact are limited under 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(9):

Judicial review of all questions of law and fact, including interpretation and application of constitutional and statutory provisions, arising from any action taken or proceeding brought to remove an alien from the United States under this subchapter shall be available only in judicial review of a final order under this section. Except as otherwise provided in this section, no court shall have jurisdiction, by habeas corpus under section 2241 of Title 28 or any other habeas corpus provision, by section 1361 or 1651 of such title, or by any other provision of law (statutory or nonstatutory), to review such an order or such questions of law or fact.

(emphasis added). This provision channels review of all “‘decisions and actions leading up to or consequent upon final orders of deportation’ in the courts of appeal, following issuance of an order of removal.” Mukantagara v. U.S. Dep’t of Homeland Sec., 67 F.4th 1113, 1115 (10th Cir. 2023) (quoting Reno v. Am.-Arab Anti-Discrimination Comm., 525 U.S. 471, 482-85 (1999)). Nevertheless, this provision is not intended “to cut off claims that have a tangential relationship with pending removal proceedings.” Id. (citation omitted).

Here, Petitioner seeks an Order from this Court overturning the IJ’s factual determination that the I-213 contained a typo and that the Petitioner was not paroled into the United States. (Doc. 1, ¶¶ 26-27; Prayer for Relief, 5). Petitioner seeks this Order believing ostensibly that it will entitle him to some relief from removal under the Cuban Adjustment Act of 1966. But this Court plainly does not have jurisdiction to second guess or overrule an IJ’s factual determinations leading up to removal. Instead, Petitioner must seek review of the IJ’s factual findings leading up to or consequent upon removal through the Petition for Review process established by the INA.

CONCLUSION

Petitioner is an “applicant for admission” and thus subject to the mandatory detention provisions of “applicants for admission” under section 1225(b)(2). Petitioner is lawfully detained pending removal proceedings, and he does not claim any immigration status that would entitle him to immediate release from custody. Petitioner’s petition for habeas should be denied.
