

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA
FORT LAUDERDALE DIVISION

CASE NO. 0:26-cv-60169-RS

Maricela Aguirre Torres,

Petitioner,

Pamela Jo Bondi, U.S. Attorney General, U.S.
Department of Justice; Kristi Noem, Secretary, U.S.
Department of Homeland Security; Garrett Ripa, Field Office Director, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, Miami, Florida,

Respondents.

RESPONDENTS' RETURN IN OPPOSITION TO THE PETITION FOR WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS AND MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

Respondents,¹ by and through the undersigned Assistant United States Attorney and pursuant to the Court's Order to Show Cause, [D.E. 4], submit the following return in opposition to the Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus, Request for Expedited Hearing, and Request for Oral Argument. [D.E. 1] ("Petition") For the reasons set forth below, the Petition should be denied.²

² Respondents recognize that courts in this District have rejected similar arguments in granting habeas petitions, see, e.g., Perez v. Parra, Case No. 25-CV-24820 (S.D. Fla.), and that this Court has also rejected similar arguments in granting a habeas petition, see, e.g., Ramirez Ramirez v. Bondi, et al., Case No. 25-CV-62009 (S.D. Fla.). Nonetheless, Respondents maintain and preserve these arguments for the record in this case.

INTRODUCTION

Petitioner Maricela Aguirre Torres (“Petitioner”) claims that her detention should be governed by 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a), which allows for release on conditional parole or bond, and seeks an order requiring either her release or for an immigration judge to complete a custody redetermination hearing. See D.E. 1, Petition at ¶¶ 31–32, Prayer for Relief. However, her ongoing mandatory detention is in accordance with 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2), which mandates mandatory detention pending removal for individuals seeking admission to the United States.

This case comes down to a question of statutory interpretation. Specifically, what statutory provision controls Petitioner’s detention. Section 1225(b)(2)(A) mandates detention for “an alien who is an applicant for admission.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A). Pursuant to § 1225(a), “[a]n alien present in the United States who has not been admitted ... shall be deemed for purposes of this chapter an applicant for admission.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(1). Petitioner has resided in the United States since entering from Mexico without being inspected or admitted in 1995. See D.E. 1, Petition, at ¶ 8. Accordingly, under a plain language reading of § 1225, Petitioner is an applicant for admission who is seeking admission and is subject to mandatory detention pursuant to § 1225(b)(2)(A). For the reasons explained more fully below, the Petition should be denied.

BACKGROUND

Petitioner is a native and citizen of Mexico. See Complaint, D.E. 1, at ¶ 4. Petitioner entered the United States from Mexico without inspection in or about 1995. Id. at ¶ 9. On or about January 20, 2026, the Department of Homeland Security (“DHS”) issued Petitioner a Form I-862, Notice to Appear (“NTA”). Id. at ¶ 10. The NTA charged Petitioner with inadmissibility under INA § 212(a)(6)(A)(i) and 212(a)(7)(A)(i)(I). See Notice to Appear (Jan. 20, 2026), attached as Exhibit

A. Petitioner is currently scheduled to appear in Immigration Court for an initial master calendar hearing on February 4, 2026. See Complaint, D.E. 1, at ¶ 12. Petitioner is currently being held at Broward Transitional Center. See Detention History, attached as Exhibit B; see also Form I-200, Warrant for Arrest of Alien, attached as Exhibit C.

ARGUMENT

I. Section 1225(b)(2) Mandates Detention of Aliens, Like Petitioner, Who Are Present in the United States Without Having Been Lawfully Admitted.

Under the plain language of § 1225(b)(2), the Government is required to detain all aliens, like Petitioner, who are present in the United States without admission and are subject to removal proceedings—regardless of how long the alien has been in the United States or how far from the border they ventured. That unambiguous language resolves this case. See Little Sisters of the Poor Saints Peter & Paul Home v. Pennsylvania, 591 U.S. 657, 676 (2020) (“Our analysis begins and ends with the text.”).

A. The Plain Language of § 1225(b)(2) Mandates Detention of Applicants for Admission.

“As with any question of statutory interpretation, [the] analysis begins with the plain language of the statute. It is well established that, when the statutory language is plain, [courts] must enforce it according to its terms.” Jimenez v. Quarterman, 555 U.S. 113, 118 (2009). Section 1225(a) deems all aliens who either “arrive[] in the United States” or who are “present in the United States [and] who ha[ve] not been admitted” to be “applicant[s] for admission.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(1). And “admission” under the Immigration and Nationality Act (“INA”) means lawful entry after inspection by immigration authorities, and not mere physical entry. 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(13)(A). Thus, an alien who enters the country without permission is and remains an applicant for admission, regardless of the duration of the alien’s presence in the United States or the alien’s distance from the border.

In turn, § 1225(b)(2) provides that “an alien who is an applicant for admission” “shall be detained” pending removal proceedings if the “alien seeking admission is not clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A). The statute’s use of the term “shall” makes clear that detention is mandatory, see Lexecon Inc. v. Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, 523 U.S. 26, 35 (1998), and the statute makes no exception based upon the duration of the alien’s presence in the country or where in the country the alien is located. Therefore, the statute’s plain text mandates that the Government detain all “applicants for admission” who are not clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted.

Petitioner falls squarely within the statutory definition. He was “present in the United States,” and has not identified any basis to contend that she has “been admitted.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a); see Petition at ¶ 8. Moreover, Petitioner cannot establish—and has not even alleged that he can establish—that she is “clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A). Therefore, § 1225(b)(2) mandates Petitioner “be detained for a proceeding under [8 U.S.C. § 1229a].” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A).

B. Applicants for Admission under § 1225(b)(2) are seeking to be legally admitted into the United States.

As explained above, Petitioner is an “applicant[] for admission” under § 1225(b)(2) and is, therefore, seeking to be legally admitted into the United States. The statute itself makes clear that an alien who is an “applicant for admission” is necessarily “seeking admission.” Moreover, an alien like Petitioner, who is identified by immigration authorities as unlawfully present, and who does not choose to withdraw their application for admission and depart from the United States voluntarily, is “seeking admission,” i.e., seeking legal authority to remain in the United States.

1. The “seeking admission” clause does not negate or otherwise limit the statutorily defined term “applicant for admission”.

Section 1225(b)(2) requires the detention of an “applicant for admission, if the examining officer determines that [the] alien seeking admission is not clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A) (emphasis added). The statutory text and context show that being an “applicant for admission” is a means of “seeking admission”—no additional affirmative step is necessary. In other words, every “applicant for admission” is inherently and necessarily “seeking admission,” at least absent a choice to pursue voluntary withdrawal of their application for admission.

For example, § 1225(a) provides that “[a]ll aliens ... who are applicants for admission or otherwise seeking admission or readmission ... shall be inspected.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(3) (emphasis added). The word “[o]therwise” means “in a different way or manner[.]” Texas Dep’t of Hous. & Cmty. Affs. v. Inclusive Communities Project, Inc., 576 U.S. 519, 535 (2015) (quoting Webster’s Third New International Dictionary 1598 (1971)); see also Villarreal v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 839 F.3d 958, 963-64 (11th Cir. 2016) (en banc) (“or otherwise” means “the first action is a subset of the second action”). Being an “applicant for admission” is thus a particular “way or manner” of seeking admission, such that an alien who is an “applicant for admission” is “seeking admission” for purposes of § 1225(b)(2)(A).³ No separate affirmative act is necessary. See Matter of Lemus-Losa, 25 I&N Dec. 734, 743 (BIA 2012) (“[M]any people who are not actually requesting permission to enter the United States in the ordinary sense are nevertheless deemed to be ‘seeking admission’ under the immigration laws”). Accordingly, § 1225(b)

³ As § 1225 shows, being an “applicant for admission” is only one “way or manner” of “seeking admission,” not the exclusive way. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(3). For example, lawful permanent residents returning to the United States are not “applicants for admission” because they are already admitted, but they still may be deemed to be “seeking admission” in some circumstances. See 8 U.S.C. § 1103(A)(13)(C).

unambiguously provides that an alien who is an “applicant for admission” is “seeking admission,” even if the alien is not engaged in some separate, affirmative act to obtain lawful admission.

2. Any perceived redundancy in the statute cannot serve as a basis to avoid the clear language of the statute.

As explained above, an “applicant for admission” is “seeking admission” under § 1225. To the extent this reading results in some redundancy in § 1225(b)(2)(A), that “is not a license to rewrite” § 1225 “contrary to its text.” Barton v. Barr, 590 U.S. 222, 239 (2020); see Heyman v. Cooper, 31 F.4th 1315, 1322 (11th Cir. 2022) (“sometimes drafters do repeat themselves and do include words that add nothing of substance” especially when “the arguably redundant words that the drafters employed ... are functional synonyms” (alterations accepted and emphasis in original)).

“The canon against surplusage is not an absolute rule.” Marx v. Gen. Revenue Corp., 568 U.S. 371, 385 (2013). “Redundancies are common in statutory drafting—sometimes in a congressional effort to be doubly sure, sometimes because of congressional inadvertence or lack of foresight, or sometimes simply because of the shortcomings of human communication.” Barton, 590 U.S. at 239. “[R]edundancy in one portion of a statute is not a license to rewrite or eviscerate another portion of the statute contrary to its text.” Id. Thus, as the Supreme Court explained in Barton, “[s]ometimes the better overall reading of a statute contains some redundancy.” Id.

Moreover, “the surplusage canon ... must be applied with statutory context in mind” and should not be employed to undermine congressional intent. United States v. Bronstein, 849 F.3d 1101, 1110 (D.C. Cir. 2017). As explained in greater detail below, in 1996, Congress passed the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigration Responsibility Act (“IIRIRA”), Pub. L. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009 (Sept. 30, 1996), with the goal of ensuring that aliens who enter the United States unlawfully do not receive greater privileges and benefits than aliens who lawfully present themselves for inspection at a port of entry. The canon against surplusage should not be employed to re-write the statute in contravention of this statutory context.

3. Applicants for admission are seeking admission when they seek to lawfully remain in the United States.

Even if “seeking admission” requires some separate affirmative conduct by the alien, an applicant for admission who attempts to avoid removal from the United States, rather than trying to withdraw their application for admission, is “seeking admission.”

Section 1225(b)(2)(A) applies to an alien who is present in the United States unlawfully, regardless of how long the alien has been in the United States. Although the alien may not have been affirmatively seeking admission during those years of illegal presence, § 1225(b)(2) is not concerned with the alien’s pre-inspection conduct. Rather, the statute’s use of present tense language (“seeking” and “determines”) shows that its focus is a specific point in time—when “the examining immigration officer” is making a “determin[ation]” regarding the alien’s admissibility. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A). At that point, the alien is “seeking” admission into the United States, and continues to be an alien seeking admission as the application is an ongoing one. See The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language (defining “seek” and “seeking” as “to endeavor to obtain”). If it were otherwise, the applicant would not attempt to show that he is “clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A). That inference is confirmed by § 1225(a)(4), which authorizes an alien to voluntarily withdraw their application for admission and “depart immediately from the United States.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(a)(4). Therefore, an applicant who forgoes that statutory option and instead endeavors to prove admissibility through § 240 removal proceedings—proceedings in which the alien has the “burden of establishing that [he] is clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted,” id. § 1229a(c)(2)(A)—is seeking admission to the United States in the same way someone who is encountered just after crossing the border is attempting to obtain admission to the United States.

C. Section 1226 Does Not Support Petitioner’s Argument.

Petitioner’s reliance upon, and reference to, 8 U.S.C. § 1226 is unavailing. Petitioner’s detention is controlled by § 1225(b)(2), not § 1226.

Sections 1225 and 1226 are separate statutory provisions that provide independent bases for detention and, generally, apply to different groups of aliens. While, as explained below, there is some overlap between the aliens subject to detention under the two detention provisions, that overlap does not create a redundancy because the two statutes provide for different bases for release.

Section 1226(a) authorizes the Executive to “arrest[] and detain[]” any “alien” pending removal proceedings. Section 1226(a) provides the detention authority for the significant group of aliens who are not deemed “applicants for admission” subject to § 1225(b)(2)(A)—specifically, aliens who have been admitted to the United States but are now removable, like those who overstay a visa or lawful permanent residents who engage in conduct that renders them removable.⁴ Thus, section 1225(b)(2) is the more specific detention provision. See RadLAX Gateway Hotel, LLC v. Amalgamated Bank, 566 U.S. 639, 645 (2012) (“the specific governs the general”). Accordingly, § 1226(a) does not control Petitioner’s detention.

Section 1226(c) provides for mandatory detention and is an exception to § 1226(a)’s discretionary detention regime. It requires the Executive to detain “any alien” who is deportable or inadmissible for having committed specified offenses or engaged in terrorism-related actions.

⁴ The detention of any of the millions of aliens who have overstayed their visas is governed by § 1226(a), because those aliens (unlike Petitioner) were lawfully admitted to the United States.

See 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(A)-(E). Petitioner has not committed one of the specified offenses and has not engaged in terrorism-related actions. Accordingly, he is not detained under § 1226(c).

Earlier this year, Congress passed the Laken Riley Act, Pub. L. No. 119-1, 139 Stat. 2 (2025), which amended portions of § 1226(c). While that amendment adds some overlap between aliens subject to detention under § 1225(b)(2) and § 1226(c), that overlap does not apply to Petitioner, and as explained below, it does not create a redundancy as the amendment does independent work.

D. The Government’s Reading Comports with Congressional Intent.

Before 1996, federal immigration laws required the detention of aliens who presented at a port of entry but allowed aliens who were already unlawfully present in the United States to obtain release pending removal proceedings. In 1996, Congress passed the IIRIRA specifically to stop conferring greater privileges and benefits on aliens who enter the United States unlawfully as compared to those who lawfully present themselves for inspection at a port of entry. Accordingly, the Government’s reading of the statute is not only supported by the express language of § 1225, but it also comports with congressional intent. See King v. Burwell, 576 U.S. 473, 492 (2015) (rejecting interpretation that would lead to a result “that Congress designed the Act to avoid”); New York State Dep’t of Soc. Servs. v. Dublino, 413 U.S. 405, 419-20 (1973) (“We cannot interpret federal statutes to negate their own stated purposes.”).

The INA, as amended, contains a comprehensive framework governing the regulation of aliens, including the creation of proceedings for the removal of aliens unlawfully in the United States and requirements for when the Executive is obligated to detain aliens pending removal.

Prior to 1996, the INA treated aliens differently based on whether the alien had physically “entered” the United States. Matter of Yajure Hurtado, 29 I&N Dec. 216, 222-23 (BIA 2025) (citing 8 U.S.C. §§ 1225(a), 1251 (1994)); see Hing Sum v. Holder, 602 F.3d 1092, 1099-1100

(9th Cir. 2010) (same). “Entry” referred to “any coming of an alien into the United States,” 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(13) (1994), and whether an alien had physically entered the United States (or not) “dictated what type of [removal] proceeding applied” and whether the alien would be detained pending those proceedings, Hing Sum, 602 F.3d at 1099. Accordingly, the INA’s prior framework, which distinguished between aliens based on physical “entry,” had the ‘unintended and undesirable consequence’ of having created a statutory scheme where aliens who entered without inspection ‘could take advantage of the greater procedural and substantive rights afforded in deportation proceedings,’ including the right to request release on bond, while aliens who had ‘actually presented themselves to authorities for inspection ... were subject to mandatory custody.

Hurtado, 29 I&N Dec. at 223 (emphasis added) (quoting Martinez v. Att’y Gen., 693 F.3d 408, 413 n.5 (3d Cir. 2012)); see also Hing Sum, 602 F.3d at 1100 (similar); H.R. Rep. No. 104-469, pt. 1, at 225 (1996) (“House Rep.”) (“illegal aliens who have entered the United States without inspection gain equities and privileges in immigration proceedings that are not available to aliens who present themselves for inspection”).

Congress discarded that regime through enactment of IIRIRA. Among other things, that law had the goal of “ensur[ing] that all immigrants who have not been lawfully admitted, regardless of their legal presence in the country, are placed on equal footing in removal proceedings under the INA.” Torres v. Barr, 976 F.3d 918, 928 (9th Cir. 2020) (en banc). To that end, IIRIRA replaced the prior focus on physical “entry” and instead made lawful “admission” the governing touchstone. IIRIRA defined “admission” to mean “the lawful entry of the alien into the United States after inspection and authorization by an immigration officer.” 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(13)(A) (emphasis added). In other words, the immigration laws would no longer distinguish aliens based on whether they had managed to evade detection and enter the country without permission. Instead, the “pivotal factor in determining an alien’s status” would be “whether or not the alien has been lawfully admitted.” House Rep., supra, at 226 (emphasis added); Hing Sum, 602 F.3d at 1100 (similar).

Petitioner’s interpretation would restore the regime Congress sought to discard: It would require detention for those who present themselves for inspection at the border in compliance with law yet grant bond hearings to aliens who evade immigration authorities, enter the United States unlawfully, and remain here unlawfully for years, or even decades, until an involuntary encounter with immigration authorities. That is exactly the perverse preferential treatment for illegal entrants that IIRIRA sought to eradicate. Accordingly, this Court should reject Petitioner’s interpretation. King, 576 U.S. at 492 (rejecting “petitioners’ interpretation because it would ... create the very [thing] that Congress designed the Act to avoid”).

The Government’s reading, on the other hand, is true to Congress’s intent and should be adopted.

E. The Government’s Reading Accords with Jennings.

The Government’s interpretation is consistent with the Supreme Court’s decision in Jennings v. Rodriguez, 583 U.S. 281 (2018). Jennings reviewed a Ninth Circuit decision that applied constitutional avoidance to “impos[e] an implicit 6-month time limit on an alien’s detention” under § 1225(b) and § 1226. Id. at 292. The Court held that neither provision is so limited. Id. at 292, 296-306. In reaching that holding, the Court did not—and did not need to—resolve the precise groups of aliens subject to § 1225(b) or § 1226. Nonetheless, consistent with the Government’s reading, the Court recognized in its description of § 1225(b) that § “1225(b)(2) ... serves as a catchall provision that applies to all applicants for admission not covered by § 1225(b)(1).” Id. at 287.

F. Under Loper Bright, the Statute Controls, Not Prior Agency Practice

Any argument that prior agency practice applying § 1226(a) to Petitioner is unavailing because under Loper Bright Enters. v. Raimondo, 603 U.S. 369, 411 (2024) (overturning Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837 (1984)), the plain language of the statute and not prior practice controls. Hurtado, 29 I&N Dec. at 225–26. In overturning Chevron, the Supreme Court recognized that courts often change precedents and “correct[] our own mistakes.” Loper Bright, 603 U.S. at 411. Loper Bright overturned a decades old agency interpretation of the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act that itself predated IIRIRA by twenty years. Id. at 380. Thus, longstanding agency practice carries little, if any, weight under Loper Bright.

II. Petitioner’s Due Process Claims Fail

Petitioner’s constitutional claims fail as a matter of law. Mandatory detention under § 1225(b) has repeatedly been upheld as constitutionally permissible. See Jennings v. Rodriguez, 583 U.S. at 299–301. The Fifth Amendment does not require bond hearings for noncitizens detained pursuant to valid statutory authority, nor does Petitioner possess a protected liberty interest in release on bond where Congress has mandated detention. The Due Process Clause does not prohibit Congress from imposing categorical detention rules in the immigration context. See Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510, 528 (2003).

Petitioner’s reliance on Zadvydas v. Davis is misplaced. To the extent that Petitioner argues that her detention violates her Due Process rights, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678 (2001), this Court should reject that claim because Zadvydas governs post-removal-order detention under § 1231, not pre-removal detention under § 1225. Moreover, Petitioner fails to allege that he is subject to “prolonged or indefinite” detention, which was at issue in Zadvydas.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus should be denied.
