Case No: 1:26-cv-447

VERIFIED PETITION FOR WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS UNDER 28 U.S.C. § 2241

Petitioner Adilet Sharshenov (“Petitioner”), by and through undersigned counsel, hereby challenges his unlawful detention, which relies entirely on a legal fiction. Petitioner is not an individual seeking admission at the border today; rather, he is a resident who was inspected and paroled into the United States on October 18, 2022. Despite his established residence in Pennsylvania and full compliance with the terms of his parole, Respondents have detained him under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b) as if he were an "arriving alien" standing at the threshold of entry.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. Petitioner's presence in the United States is the result of a lawful and orderly process, not evasion. On October 18, 2022, he voluntarily presented himself for inspection at a port of entry and was granted humanitarian parole, authorizing him to enter and reside in the country.

2. Upon arrival, Petitioner was inspected by U.S. Customs and Border Protection and lawfully paroled into the United States pursuant to INA § 212(d)(5). Petitioner was issued a Form I-94 authorizing his stay through October 17, 2023.

3. Since his lawful entry, Petitioner has established significant ties to the United States. Until his detention, he obtained employment authorization, lawfully worked, and paid taxes, demonstrating his compliance with U.S. law and his integration into the community.

4. Petitioner diligently complied with all legal requirements while awaiting adjudication of his immigration status. On December 22, 2022, he timely filed a Form I-589 Application for Asylum with the Chicago Immigration Court. Petitioner appeared at his Master Calendar Hearing on March 27, 2023, represented by counsel. Thereafter, following Petitioner's relocation to Bristol, Pennsylvania, his immigration case was transferred to the Philadelphia Immigration Court. Having complied with all court orders and submitted all required documentation, Petitioner was scheduled for an Individual Hearing on February 10, 2027.

5. On January 17, 2026, Petitioner was taken into custody by officers of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (“ICE”) in Casper, Wyoming, while driving his personal vehicle, a white Toyota Grand Highlander, to a local gas station. ICE agents blocked Petitioner’s vehicle and detained him without incident or resistance. Petitioner was initially held at a local detention facility in Wyoming and, approximately one week later, was transferred to another local detention facility before ultimately being transferred to the Denver area. Although this arrest occurred entirely within the interior of the United States, far from any border or port of entry, Respondents have nevertheless treated Petitioner as if he were an “arriving alien” subject to mandatory detention.

6. Following Petitioner’s detention, his immigration case was subsequently transferred to the Aurora Immigration Court, and a Master Calendar Hearing was scheduled for February 10, 2026.

7. Petitioner has no history of failing to appear and was actively and diligently pursuing his asylum claim before the Immigration Judge. Based on his pending asylum application, Petitioner was granted employment authorization. With a valid employment authorization document, he obtained a Commercial Driver’s License (“CDL”), worked lawfully as a truck driver, paid taxes, and maintained a fixed residence in Pennsylvania.

8. Despite the scheduling of removal proceedings, Petitioner remains detained without bond. The basis for this continued detention is a misapplication of the statute. Although Petitioner was inspected, paroled, and released into the interior years ago, ICE is detaining him under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b). By classifying a resident paroled noncitizen as an “applicant for admission” seeking entry at the border, Respondents have categorically denied him the opportunity for a bond hearing. This detention does not stem from a border encounter; it stems from the arrest of an individual living and working in the United States while awaiting his scheduled day in court.

9. Respondents' invocation of 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b) rests on a fundamental legal error. That statute is textually and structurally limited to noncitizens seeking admission at the border or apprehended immediately upon entry. It does not grant DHS the authority to reach into the interior of the country and retroactively apply mandatory detention to an individual who was inspected, paroled, and released years earlier. Petitioner's arrest did not occur at the border; it occurred in the heart of the United States, while he was residing and working lawfully. By treating a long-time resident parolee as an "arriving alien" standing at the threshold of entry, Respondents are relying on a legal fiction to deny Petitioner his statutory right to a bond hearing.

10. In Matter of Q. Li, 29 I&N Dec. 66 (BIA 2025), the Board of Immigration Appeals held that Immigration Judges lack bond jurisdiction where the Department of Homeland Security classifies a noncitizen's detention as arising under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b). Nothing in Matter of Q. Li purports to resolve whether § 1225(b) lawfully applies to noncitizens who were inspected, paroled into the United States, released into the interior, and later arrested by ICE. Nevertheless, as applied in practice, Matter of Q. Li has resulted in Immigration Judges declining to exercise bond jurisdiction once DHS invokes § 1225(b), without adjudicating whether that detention provision properly governs the circumstances of such interior arrests. As a result, the application of Matter of Q. Li in this context operates to foreclose any meaningful administrative forum for Petitioner to challenge the statutory basis of his detention.

11. Respondents' new legal interpretation is plainly contrary to the statutory framework and contrary to decades of agency practice of instead applying 8 U.S.C. 1226(a), which allows for release on conditional parole or allows for an IJ to consider bond requests or make bond redeterminations.

12. Because Petitioner was paroled into the United States and was awaiting his scheduled Individual Hearing at the time of his arrest, his detention is governed, if at all, by 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a), which authorizes release on bond or conditional parole and requires an individualized custody determination. ICE's refusal to provide such process violates the Immigration and Nationality Act and the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

13. Petitioner has not been afforded an individualized custody determination or the opportunity to seek release on bond. Because DHS's asserted detention framework forecloses bond jurisdiction as a matter of nationwide administrative practice, Petitioner lacks any meaningful administrative forum in which to challenge the legality of his detention.

14. Petitioner respectfully requests that this Court find his detention unlawful under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b) and order his release, or in the alternative, direct that he be placed into standard removal proceedings under 8 U.S.C. § 1229(a), consistent with the due process principles established in Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678 (2001), and Landon v. Plasencia, 459 U.S. 21 (1982), and require that Petitioner be released unless Respondents provide Petitioner an immigration bond hearing under 8 U.S.C. 1226(a) within seven days.

II. PARTIES

15. Petitioner is a citizen of Russia who resided at 1437 Colonial Ave. Bristol, PA 19007, prior to his detention. He was issued a Form I-94 documenting his grant of parole and authorizing his presence in the United States for a period of one year, from October 18, 2022, through October 19, 2023.

16. Respondents are the federal officials responsible for Petitioner's custody and the enforcement of the immigration detention laws, including: Juan Baltazar, Warden of the Denver Contract Detention Center; Robert Hagan, Director of the ICE Denver Field Office; Todd M. Lyons, Acting Director of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement; Kristi Noem, Secretary of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security; and Pamela Bondi, Attorney General of the United States. Respondents are all sued in their official capacities.

III. JURISDICTION

17. This Court has jurisdiction over this Petition pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241, which authorizes federal courts to grant habeas relief to individuals who are "in custody in violation of the Constitution or laws or treaties of the United States."

18. Petitioner is currently detained within this District at Denver Contract Detention Center in Aurora, Colorado, and therefore, jurisdiction is proper in this Court. See Rumsfeld v. Padilla, 542 U.S. 426, 443 (2004) (a habeas petition must be filed in the district of confinement and name the immediate custodian).

19. This action arises under the Constitution of the United States and the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA), 8 U.S.C. § 1101 et seq., as amended by the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (IIRIRA), Pub. L. No 104-208, 110 Stat. 1570. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 2241 and the Suspension Clause of the Constitution because this action is a habeas corpus petition, and under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 because this action arises under federal law, including the INA, 8 U.S.C. § 1101, et seq., and the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 551, et seq. In sum, this Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 2241 (habeas corpus), 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (federal question), and Article I, section 9, clause 2 of the United States Constitution (the Suspension Clause).

20. This Court may grant relief pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241, the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. §2201 et seq., and the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1651.

21. Congress has stripped district courts of habeas jurisdiction in certain immigration-related contexts, including through provisions such as 8 U.S.C. § 1252. Those jurisdiction-stripping provisions, however, are inapplicable here. Although Congress possesses the authority to limit habeas jurisdiction, that authority is subject to strict construction. See Reno v. American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee, 525 U.S. 471, 482–83 (1999) (explaining that jurisdiction-stripping provisions should not be read expansively to encompass claims beyond those expressly identified). See also Jennings v. Rodriguez, 583 U.S. 281, 138 S. Ct. 830, 840–41 (2018) (noting that courts have historically declined to apply overly literal readings to broad statutory language when construing the scope of immigration statutes). Because the vast majority of jurisdiction-stripping provisions do not expressly reference challenges to immigration detention, they do not deprive this Court of habeas jurisdiction over Petitioner’s detention-based claims.

22. Consistent with that principle, the Supreme Court has made clear that habeas jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 2241 remains available for statutory and constitutional challenges to immigration detention unless Congress has spoken with unmistakable clarity to eliminate such review. See INS v. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. 289, 305–14 (2001). The jurisdiction-stripping provisions set forth in 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2) are limited in scope and address discrete categories of review, such as challenges to expedited removal orders or certain forms of discretionary relief. Those provisions do not purport to eliminate habeas jurisdiction over claims challenging the legality of immigration detention itself. Accordingly, where a petitioner challenges the statutory and constitutional basis of his continued detention—rather than the merits of a removal order—§ 1252(a)(2) does not deprive this Court of jurisdiction to entertain a petition for habeas corpus.

23. Section 1226(e) limits judicial review of discretionary judgments regarding the detention or release of noncitizens. That provision, however, does not bar habeas review of statutory or constitutional challenges to the legality of detention itself. See Jennings, 583 U.S. at 295 (explaining that § 1226(e) does not preclude challenges to the statutory framework governing detention). Accordingly, where a petitioner contests whether the government is detaining him under a lawful statutory authority, § 1226(e) does not deprive this Court of habeas jurisdiction.

24. The inapplicability of 8 U.S.C. § 1226(e) to habeas challenges is confirmed by the statutory history of the INA. Prior to the Supreme Court’s decision in St. Cyr, the INA’s jurisdiction-stripping provisions did not specifically reference habeas corpus. See, e.g., 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(A) (no express reference to habeas corpus). The Supreme Court explained that, absent a clear statement from Congress, statutory and constitutional challenges remained cognizable in habeas corpus proceedings. See St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 312–13.

25. At that time, Congress did not amend 8 U.S.C. § 1226(e) to include any reference to habeas corpus, and it has not done so since. Compare, for example, 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(A) (2005), which expressly references habeas corpus, with 8 U.S.C. § 1226(e) (2005) and 8 U.S.C. § 1226(e) (2020), both of which contain no reference to habeas corpus. This statutory contrast supports the conclusion that Congress did not intend § 1226(e) to eliminate habeas review. See also H.R. Rep. No. 109-72, at 175 (2005) (explaining that the amendments were designed to eliminate habeas review over challenges to removal orders, while preserving habeas review over challenges to detention independent of removal orders).

26. Canons of statutory construction support that conclusion. Courts presume that when Congress amends a statute, the amendment is intended to have meaningful effect. See Stone v. INS, 514 U.S. 386, 397 (1995) (citing Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 339 (1979), and Moskal v. United States, 498 U.S. 103, 109–11 (1990)). By contrast, where Congress elects not to amend a statutory provision while amending related provisions, that choice supports the inference that no change was intended. Accordingly, Congress’s decision to leave 8 U.S.C. § 1226(e) unchanged supports the conclusion that habeas corpus jurisdiction over challenges to detention was preserved.

27. Furthermore, even if 8 U.S.C. § 1226(e) were construed to apply to petitions for habeas corpus generally, it would not extend to Petitioner’s specific claims. Section 1226(e) limits judicial review only with respect to discretionary judgments regarding detention or release. Administrative agencies lack discretion to act in violation of the Constitution, and constitutional challenges therefore fall outside the scope of discretionary determinations. See Jennings v. Rodriguez, 138 S. Ct. 830, 841. Accordingly, as a matter of statutory interpretation, § 1226(e) does not preclude habeas review of constitutional challenges to the legality of detention.

28. Therefore, this Court has jurisdiction to review this habeas petition on behalf of Petitioner.

IV. VENUE

29. The District of Colorado has consistently recognized habeas jurisdiction over challenges to the statutory authority for civil immigration detention, including claims alleging detention under an inapplicable provision of the Immigration and Nationality Act. See, e.g., Diallo v. Baltazar, No. 1:25-cv-03548-SKC (D. Colo. Jan. 29, 2026) (exercising § 2241 jurisdiction and granting habeas relief where DHS unlawfully detained a noncitizen under § 1225(b)); Garcia-Perez v. Guardian, No. 25-cv-04069-PAB (D. Colo. Jan. 13, 2026) (rejecting jurisdiction-stripping arguments and ordering a bond hearing under § 1226(a)); Mohamed v. Baltazar, No. 1:25-cv-03217-REB (D. Colo. Dec. 18, 2025) (holding that challenges to the legality of detention itself fall squarely within the core of habeas corpus). These decisions confirm that this Court routinely exercises habeas jurisdiction where DHS's asserted detention authority is disputed, and that jurisdiction is proper here.

30. Venue is also properly in this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e) because Respondents are employees, officers, and agencies of the United States, and because a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claims occurred in the District of Colorado.

31. The venue is therefore proper in this District, as the Petitioner is detained here, and the immediate custodian responsible for his detention is located within this District.

V. REQUIREMENTS OF 28 U.S.C. § 2243

32. The Court must grant the petition for writ of habeas corpus or issue an order to show cause to the respondents “forthwith,” unless Petitioner is not entitled to relief. 28 U.S.C. § 2243. If an order to show cause is issued, the Court must require Respondents to file a return “within three days unless for good cause additional time, not exceeding twenty days, is allowed.” Id. (emphasis added).

33. Courts have long recognized the significance of the habeas statute in protecting individuals from unlawful detention. Habeas corpus is “perhaps the most important writ known to constitutional law . . . affording as it does a swift and imperative remedy in all cases of illegal restraint or confinement.” Fay v. Noia, 372 U.S. 391, 400 (1963) (emphasis added). “The application for the writ usurps the attention and displaces the calendar of the judge or justice who entertains it and receives prompt action from him within the four corners of the application.” Yong v. INS, 208 F.3d 1116, 1120 (9th Cir. 2000) (citation omitted).

VI. LEGAL FRAMEWORK

34. The Immigration and Nationality Act (“INA”) prescribes three basic detention frameworks applicable to noncitizens encountered by the Department of Homeland Security during the removal process.

35. First, 8 U.S.C. § 1226 governs the detention of noncitizens placed in standard removal proceedings before an Immigration Judge (“IJ”) under 8 U.S.C. § 1229a. Noncitizens detained pursuant to § 1226(a) are entitled to an individualized custody determination, including the opportunity for release on bond or conditional parole. See 8 C.F.R. §§ 1003.19(a), 1236.1(d). Mandatory detention under § 1226(c) applies only to a narrow category of individuals with specified criminal histories.

36. Second, the INA provides for mandatory detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b), which applies exclusively to noncitizens seeking admission at a port of entry or apprehended at or shortly after entry, before they have been admitted or paroled into the United States.

37. Third, the INA authorizes detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a) for noncitizens subject to a final order of removal, including individuals in withholding-only proceedings.

38. This case concerns the misapplication of § 1225(b) to a noncitizen who was lawfully paroled into the United States, placed into standard removal proceedings, and detained while awaiting adjudication before an Immigration Judge, such that § 1226(a) governs Petitioner’s custody.

39. Petitioner was inspected and paroled into the United States pursuant to INA § 212(d)(5) through the humanitarian parole process and was issued a Form I-94 documenting parole. Parole under § 212(d)(5) constitutes lawful authorization to be physically present in the United States pending further proceedings.

40. Following his parole, Petitioner was placed into removal proceedings under § 1229a, and jurisdiction vested with the Immigration Court. At the time of his arrest by ICE, Petitioner was awaiting a scheduled Individual Calendar Hearing and had not been ordered removed.

41. Noncitizens who have been paroled into the United States and placed into § 1229a removal proceedings are, by statute, governed by the detention framework set forth in § 1226(a). Nothing in the INA authorizes DHS to treat such individuals as subject to mandatory detention under § 1225(b).

42. Nevertheless, ICE has recently asserted detention authority inconsistent with the statutory framework by detaining paroled noncitizens as though they were applicants for admission subject to § 1225(b), even when those individuals have long since entered the United States and are residing in the interior pending Immigration Court proceedings.

43. That interpretation conflicts with the text, structure, and purpose of the INA. Section 1225(b) applies only to individuals “seeking admission” and is premised on inspections conducted at the border or immediately upon entry. See 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A).

44. The Supreme Court has confirmed that § 1225(b)’s mandatory detention regime applies at the Nation’s borders and ports of entry, where the government determines admissibility in the first instance. Jennings 583 U.S. at 287.

45. By contrast, § 1226(a) applies broadly to noncitizens “pending a decision on whether the alien is to be removed from the United States”, including individuals charged as inadmissible and placed into § 1229a proceedings.

46. Federal courts have repeatedly held that DHS may not detain paroled noncitizens awaiting Immigration Court proceedings under § 1225(b). Rather, such individuals fall squarely within § 1226(a) and are entitled to an individualized custody determination. See, e.g., Hyppolite v. Noem, 2025 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 197628 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 6, 2025).

47. In Hyppolite, the court rejected the government’s attempt to classify a paroled asylum seeker awaiting Immigration Court proceedings as subject to mandatory detention, holding that the government’s characterization of detention authority is not controlling and that detention must comport with statutory limits and due process.

48. The same reasoning applies here. Petitioner was paroled into the United States, released into the interior, authorized to work, and placed into standard removal proceedings. ICE therefore lacks statutory authority to detain him under § 1225(b).

49. ICE’s detention of Petitioner cannot be justified by reference to any independent ground once Petitioner was paroled into the United States and placed into removal proceedings under 8 U.S.C. § 1229a. At that point, and in the absence of any criminal conduct, Petitioner’s custody could only be governed by 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a).

50. Section 1226(a) requires that detention be discretionary, subject to individualized review, and accompanied by the opportunity for release on bond or conditional parole.

51. ICE’s refusal to provide Petitioner with a bond hearing or other individualized custody determination violates the INA, implementing regulations, and the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

52. Because Petitioner is neither an arriving alien seeking admission nor subject to a final order of removal, his continued detention under any framework other than § 1226(a) is ultra vires.

53. Accordingly, Petitioner's detention is not authorized by statute, and habeas relief is warranted.

VII. EXHAUSTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES

54. Exhaustion of administrative remedies is not required in this case. 28 U.S.C. § 2241 contains no statutory exhaustion requirement, and courts apply only a prudential exhaustion doctrine in immigration habeas matters. See McCarthy v. Madigan, 503 U.S. 140, 144 (1992) (exhaustion not required where not mandated by statute); Hernandez v. Gonzales, 424 F.3d 42, 49 (1st Cir. 2005) (no exhaustion required for challenges to detention authority). Where, as here, a petitioner challenges the statutory and constitutional authority for detention, exhaustion is not required because administrative agencies cannot adjudicate constitutional claims and lack the power to grant habeas relief. See Sterkaj v. Gonzales, 439 F.3d 273, 279 (6th Cir. 2006) (BIA lacks authority to decide constitutional issues).

55. Moreover, exhaustion would be futile because neither the IJ nor the Board of Immigration Appeals can review DHS's claim that Petitioner is subject to mandatory detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b), nor can they order release where DHS invokes that statute. Administrative procedures, therefore, cannot provide the relief sought, release from unlawful detention. See McCarthy, 503 U.S. at 146–49 (exhaustion excused where agency remedies are inadequate or would cause irreparable injury).

56. District of Colorado has likewise exercised habeas jurisdiction over materially identical challenges to the statutory and constitutional basis of civil immigration detention. As discussed above, this Court has rejected the Government's reliance on jurisdiction-stripping provisions of the INA and has held that challenges to the legality of detention itself fall squarely within the core of habeas corpus. See Diallo v. Baltazar; Garcia-Perez v. Guardian. In these cases, the court emphasized that when the Government restrains a person's liberty, it bears the burden of identifying a lawful statutory basis for that detention and providing constitutionally adequate process.

57. Consistent with that principle, the District of Colorado has ordered habeas relief where DHS failed to justify continued detention through an individualized custody determination or relied on an inapplicable detention framework. See Mohamed v. Baltazar. There, as here, the court concluded that detention unsupported by a valid statutory basis and unaccompanied by prompt review before a neutral decisionmaker violated due process, and it ordered release or meaningful custody review. These decisions confirm that habeas relief is appropriate where the Government cannot lawfully justify continued civil immigration detention.

58. Accordingly, under binding precedent from this Court, challenges to the statutory and constitutional basis of civil immigration detention are properly brought through habeas corpus, and detention without a prompt, individualized custody determination is unlawful.

59. The government's reliance on Matter of Yajure Hurtado and Matter of Q. Li to justify mandatory detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b) is legally unsustainable. As the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri recently held, 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(2)(A) applies only when a noncitizen “applicant for admission” is actively “seeking admission” into the United States. The court rejected DHS’s attempt to apply § 1225(b) to noncitizens apprehended in the interior, concluding that such individuals fall outside the scope of § 1225(b) and are instead governed by 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a), which entitles them to an individualized custody determination, including the opportunity for a bond hearing. Because Petitioner was arrested in the interior of the United States after being inspected and paroled and while awaiting Immigration Court proceedings, § 1225(b) does not apply to his detention, and Respondents lack statutory authority to deny him access to a bond hearing. See Khutyayev v. Arnott, 6:25-cv-03393-MDH (W.D. Mo. Jan. 8, 2026)

60. Federal courts have recognized that noncitizens who have been inspected and paroled into the United States and who are awaiting adjudication in removal proceedings are not subject to mandatory detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b). In Castañon-Nava v. Department of Homeland Security, Civ. Act. No. 18-cv-3757 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 13, 2025), the district court squarely rejected DHS’s position that individuals apprehended in the interior may be subjected to § 1225(b)(2) mandatory detention, holding instead that such individuals fall under the discretionary detention framework of 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a). The court emphasized that § 1225(b) is limited to individuals seeking admission at the border or apprehended upon or shortly after entry and does not extend to noncitizens who have already entered the United States and are residing in the interior pending Immigration Court proceedings.

61. The court reaffirmed this conclusion days later in denying the government’s emergency motion to stay pending appeal. Castañon-Nava v. DHS, No. 18-cv-3757 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 18, 2025). There, the court again held that DHS lacks authority to detain paroled noncitizens under § 1225(b), explaining that ICE may not arrest an individual under § 1226(a) authority and then retroactively “convert” that detention into mandatory detention under § 1225(b)(2). Although the decision is currently on appeal and arises from a different jurisdiction, its reasoning is directly applicable here and provides persuasive authority confirming that paroled noncitizens awaiting Immigration Judge proceedings are governed by § 1226(a) and entitled to an individualized custody determination.

62. Courts across multiple jurisdictions have reached the same conclusion as the Northern District of Illinois, holding that 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b) does not authorize mandatory detention of noncitizens who have already entered the United States and are apprehended in the interior while awaiting removal proceedings. In Rodriguez-Vazquez v. Bostock, 779 F. Supp. 3d 1239 (W.D. Wash. 2025), the court held that § 1226(a), not § 1225(b), governs detention where a noncitizen was not apprehended at the border or immediately upon entry. The court emphasized that § 1225(b) is limited to individuals “seeking admission” and does not extend to those who are already present in the United States pending adjudication before an Immigration Judge.

63. Similarly, the District of Massachusetts has repeatedly rejected DHS’s attempt to expand § 1225(b) beyond its statutory limits. In Gomes v. Hyde, No. 1:25-cv-11571, 2025 WL 1869299, at 6–8 (D. Mass. July 7, 2025), the court held that § 1225(b)(2) applies only at the border or shortly after entry and does not authorize mandatory detention of individuals apprehended in the interior months or years later. The court explained that the phrase “seeking admission” is written in the present tense, confirming that Congress intended § 1225(b) to apply only at the point of entry, not after a noncitizen has been released into the country.

64. The court applied the same reasoning in Martinez v. Hyde, 792 F. Supp. 3d 211

(D. Mass. July 24, 2025), rejecting DHS's interpretation of 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b) as overly expansive and inconsistent with the statute's text, structure, and historical application. The court explained that once a noncitizen is physically present in the United States and placed into removal proceedings under 8 U.S.C. § 1229a, any detention authority must arise under 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a), which requires an individualized custody determination rather than mandatory detention.

65. Courts in this District have likewise exercised habeas jurisdiction over challenges to the statutory and constitutional basis of civil immigration detention arising from interior enforcement actions. As discussed above, the District of Colorado has rejected the Government's reliance on jurisdiction-stripping provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act and has held that challenges to the lawfulness of detention itself are properly brought through habeas corpus. See Diallo v. Baltazar; Garcia-Perez v. Guardian; Mohamed v. Baltazar. In these cases, the court emphasized that when the Government restrains an individual's liberty, it bears the burden of establishing a lawful statutory basis for detention and must provide prompt, individualized custody review consistent with due process. Where the Government failed to justify continued detention under the governing statutory framework, the court ordered habeas relief, including release or meaningful custody review. These decisions confirm that civil immigration detention following interior enforcement is subject to habeas review and cannot be sustained absent a valid statutory basis and individualized process.

66. Taken together, these decisions reflect a growing and consistent consensus among district courts that DHS lacks statutory authority to impose mandatory detention under § 1225(b) on noncitizens who have been paroled into the United States, apprehended in the interior, and are awaiting adjudication before an Immigration Judge. While these decisions arise from different jurisdictions, their reasoning is uniform and directly applicable here, confirming that Petitioner's detention must be governed by § 1226(a) and accompanied by an individualized custody determination.

67. In light of the foregoing authority, further administrative proceedings cannot remedy Petitioner's unlawful and unconstitutional detention. Immigration Judges lack authority to resolve the purely statutory and constitutional questions presented here, including whether DHS is detaining Petitioner under an inapplicable detention provision. As a practical matter, following the Board of Immigration Appeals' precedential decision in Matter of Q. Li, 29 I&N Dec. 66 (BIA 2025), Immigration Judges have routinely concluded that they lack jurisdiction to consider bond requests once DHS asserts detention authority under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b), even where the noncitizen affirmatively disputes the applicability of that statute as a matter of statutory interpretation. Consequently, bond applications by individuals in Petitioner's posture are denied as a matter of course based solely on DHS's asserted detention framework, without any forum for adjudicating whether § 1225(b) lawfully applies to detention occurring in the interior of the United States after parole and release. Under these circumstances, administrative remedies are not merely inadequate, but functionally unavailable, rendering habeas corpus relief the only viable mechanism to challenge Petitioner's continued detention. Requiring prudential exhaustion would therefore be futile and would serve only to prolong unlawful custody and irreparable harm.

VIII. CLAIMS FOR RELIEF

CLAIM ONE

Detention Violates the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA)

68. Petitioner incorporates by reference the allegations set forth in the preceding paragraphs.

69. The government is unlawfully detaining Petitioner pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b), despite the fact that § 1225(b) governs detention arising in connection with the inspection and admission process. Petitioner is not such an individual; rather, he entered the United States pursuant to a grant of humanitarian parole on October 18, 2022, and has remained continuously present in the United States for more than three (3) years. The statutory framework and decades of established agency practice make clear that individuals who entered long ago and were not apprehended at or near the border are detained, if at all, under 8 U.S.C. § 1226, which allows for discretionary custody and provides the right to a bond hearing.

70. The government's effort to classify Petitioner as an "applicant for admission" subject to mandatory detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b) rests entirely on a legal label that no longer corresponds to Petitioner's procedural posture. Petitioner was inspected and paroled into the United States pursuant to INA § 212(d)(5), released into the interior, and placed into standard removal proceedings under 8 U.S.C. § 1229a. Once parole was granted and jurisdiction vested with the Immigration Court, Petitioner ceased to be a noncitizen "seeking admission" within the meaning of § 1225(b).

71. The Board of Immigration Appeals' decision in Matter of Q. Li, 29 I&N Dec. 66 (BIA 2025), confirms that detention authority turns on the statutory framework invoked by DHS and that Immigration Judges lack jurisdiction to reclassify detention once DHS asserts § 1225(b). That jurisdictional rule, however, does not expand DHS's underlying statutory authority. Nothing in the INA permits DHS to invoke § 1225(b) to mandatorily detain a noncitizen who has already been inspected, paroled, released into the interior, and placed into § 1229a removal proceedings.

To the contrary, detention in such circumstances—if authorized at all—arises under 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a), which requires an individualized custody determination.

72. Federal courts have rejected DHS’s attempt to manufacture mandatory detention authority by continuing to classify paroled, interior noncitizens as “applicants for admission.” Once a noncitizen has been released into the interior after inspection and parole, detention is governed by 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a), not § 1225(b), which is limited to individuals at the border or in the immediate process of entry. The Western District of Missouri reaffirmed this statutory boundary in Khutyaev v. Arnott, holding that DHS could not lawfully apply § 1225(b) to a noncitizen who had been inspected and paroled into the United States and later apprehended in the interior. The court emphasized that detention without an individualized custody determination and without prompt access to a neutral decisionmaker violates due process and ordered the petitioner’s release. That reasoning confirms that DHS may not evade individualized custody review by misclassifying paroled, interior noncitizens as subject to mandatory detention. District courts nationwide have reached the same conclusion, holding that § 1225(b) cannot be extended to paroled noncitizens apprehended in the interior. See, e.g., Rodriguez-Vazquez, 779 F. Supp. 3d 1239; Gomes, No. 1:25-CV-11571-JEK.

73. Because Petitioner is not subject to detention under § 1225(b), his continued detention without access to a custody redetermination hearing violates the INA, exceeds DHS’s statutory authority, and is unlawful. Petitioner is entitled to habeas relief, including immediate release, or in the alternative, a constitutionally compliant bond hearing under 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a).

CLAIM TWO

Violation of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment

74. Petitioner incorporates by reference the allegations set forth in the preceding paragraphs.

75. Petitioner's continued detention without a bond hearing or individualized determination of flight risk or danger violates the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. The government asserts that Petitioner is subject to mandatory detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b), even though he has resided in the United States for more than three (3) years, is deeply embedded in his community, and has not been apprehended at or near the border.

76. Treating Petitioner as an "applicant for admission" and subjecting him to indefinite, mandatory detention without procedural safeguards is arbitrary, punitive, and contrary to the basic guarantees of due process.

77. As the Court explained in Zadvydas, freedom from bodily restraint lies at the core of the liberty protected by the Due Process Clause. Even where the government possesses authority to detain individuals for immigration purposes, such detention must bear a reasonable relation to its asserted purpose and be accompanied by adequate procedural protections. See Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510, 531 (2003). Here, Petitioner's detention is not reasonably related to any legitimate immigration purpose because he is not a recent entrant, has longstanding ties to the United States, and DHS cannot justify treating him as if he had just arrived under an expedited removal framework.

78. Moreover, the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan recently held that applying mandatory detention under § 1225(b) to a paroled noncitizen apprehended in the interior violates the Due Process Clause. See Kozubaev v. Lynch, No. 1:25-cv-1873, Slip Op. at 3–5 (W.D. Mich. Jan. 15, 2026). In Kozubaev, the court squarely rejected the government's attempt to detain a paroled asylum seeker under § 1225(b)(2), holding instead that '§ 1226(a), not § 1225(b)(2)(A), governs noncitizens... who have resided in the United States and were already within the United States when apprehended.' Id. at 3. Finding that continued detention without a bond hearing violated the Fifth Amendment, the court ordered the government to provide a bond hearing under § 1226(a) within five business days or immediately release the petitioner. Id. at 5. That rationale applies squarely here. The government provides no mechanism for Petitioner to contest his detention or seek release, resulting in effectively indefinite detention without process, which the Supreme Court has repeatedly condemned. See Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 690–92; Clark v. Martinez, 543 U.S. 371, 386–87 (2005)."

79. Accordingly, Petitioner's continued detention violates the Fifth Amendment, and this Court should grant habeas relief and order Petitioner's immediate release, or, at a minimum, a prompt bond hearing with the government bearing the burden to justify continued detention by clear and convincing evidence.

CLAIM THREE

Violation of the Suspension Clause of the U.S. Constitution

80. Petitioner incorporates by reference all preceding paragraphs. The Suspension Clause, U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 2, guarantees that "[t]he Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it." Petitioner's continued detention, without access to judicial review or a mechanism to challenge the legality of custody, violates this constitutional guarantee. By asserting mandatory detention authority under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b) and denying Petitioner any opportunity to seek release or a bond hearing, the government has effectively extinguished the core function of the writ, to test the legality of restraint on personal liberty.

81. The Supreme Court has long held that habeas relief remains available to noncitizens seeking to challenge unlawful executive detention. See St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 301 (“At the absolute minimum, the Suspension Clause protects the writ as it existed in 1789.”). The writ cannot be withdrawn where, as here, the Executive detains an individual without statutory authority and without due process safeguards. See Boumediene v. Bush, 553 U.S. 723, 797 (2008) (inadequate substitutes cannot replace habeas; detainees must have a meaningful opportunity to challenge detention).

82. The District of Colorado has repeatedly exercised habeas jurisdiction over challenges to the statutory and constitutional basis of civil immigration detention arising from interior enforcement actions. In Florez Marin v. Baltazar, No. 1:25-cv-03697-PAB (D. Colo. Dec. 18, 2025), the court squarely rejected the Government’s reliance on 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b) to justify detention of a noncitizen apprehended in the interior and held that detention was governed by 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a), entitling the petitioner to individualized custody review. Similarly, in Diallo v. Baltazar, the court granted habeas relief and ordered immediate release where the Government lacked lawful statutory authority to continue detention and could not cure that defect through post-hoc procedural mechanisms. The court reached the same conclusion in Garcia-Perez v. Guardian, reaffirming that challenges to the legality of detention itself fall squarely within the core of habeas review and cannot be foreclosed by jurisdiction-stripping provisions of the INA. Taken together, these decisions confirm that in this District, civil immigration detention following interior enforcement is subject to habeas review and must rest on a valid statutory basis and constitutionally adequate process.

83. Because Petitioner's detention without access to meaningful judicial review of his custody constitutes an effective suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, this Court must exercise jurisdiction and grant relief. Petitioner respectfully requests an order directing his immediate release, or, in the alternative, a prompt individualized custody hearing at which the government must justify continued detention by clear and convincing evidence.

IX. PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Petitioner respectfully requests that this Court:

1. Assume jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241;
2. Issue an order prohibiting Respondents from transferring Petitioner outside this judicial district during the pendency of these proceedings;
3. Issue an Order requiring Respondents to show cause as to why Petitioner should not be released immediately, or in the alternative afforded a bond hearing before a neutral Immigration Judge, at which the government bears the burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that continued detention is justified based on danger to the community or risk of flight;
4. Declare that Petitioner's continued detention without access to a bond hearing violates the Immigration and Nationality Act, its implementing regulations, and the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution;
5. Enjoin Respondents from re-detaining Petitioner absent lawful statutory authority and constitutionally sufficient procedures;
6. Declare that Petitioner is not subject to mandatory detention under 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b) and is entitled to custody review under 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a);

7. Grant such other and further relief as the Court deems just and proper in equity and under the circumstances.
